Exhibition Hockey Game New Year's Holiday

On Monday Vegreville and Tofield Seniors clashed in an exhibition game at the local rink. It was a good exhibition of the winter game with the locals losing by a 7-5 score.

There was only one score in the first period, by Smith for Tofield, and the teams played on practically even terms.

The second period was the best hockey of the three. Vegreville scoring four times and Tofield twice. This put the visitors one up at the end of he second period. Goals for Vegreville were scored by McPherson, Penich, Ruzicki 2. Tofield A. Smith, C. Bisza.

The third period opened up fast and Vegreville scored early in the period, Tofield retaliated with a score, but Vegreville washed that out with another. The game developed into a whirlwind finish, Vegreville hanging on to their one goal lead and Tofield trying to get the equalizer. Toward the end of the period both teams scored again and later Vegreville scored another, making the final score 7-5 for the visitors.

Tofield: H. Bewick, Lee Glover, N. Glover, Evwich, Worten, J. Bewick, Smith, Beirnes, MacInnes, Sears.

Referee—Bob Evans.

How About A Southern Accent?

Mr. L. H. Graham shoved the north closer the arctic circle this year. Planting and harvesting two acres of Northwestern Dent corn, he got three double-box wagon loads of cobs. On Wednesday of this week he brought in a load of cobs to be ground, which was probably the first load of home grown corn to be ground in Tofield.

On Friday evening last, the young people of Tofield and district assembled in the Variety Theatre to bid farewell to Mr. A. MacInnes (Mac) who has been transferred to a branch of the Bank of Montreal in Leduc. Dancing was enjoyed by the crowd, the music being supplied by the Edwards boys. After lunch, on behalf of the young people present, Bill Worten presented Mac with a gold watch chain. In thanking the crowd, Mac said he certainly enjoyed his stay in Tofield and was sorry to leave. The group then sang "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," followed by "Auld Lang Syne," after which more dancing was enjoyed.

"Aunt Becky" Feeds The Boys

On Monday quite a number of the young fellows around town were entertained to a turkey dinner by Miss Erickson at the Glover home. The festive board graced with a 20 pound turkey and all the trimmings, was done full justice to by 15 or 20 hungry youths. And Dot says she made an expert cook's heart feel good. The boys expressed thanks for the homeness courtesy shown.

Double Feature For Next Tuesday

Two first class features for the price of one is the screen bill of fare for next Tuesday at the Variety.

Sharp's Shows maintaining their record of presenting outstanding productions will show "Stand In," a comedy of the first water. Leslie Howard and Joan Blondell star in this picture and are supported by an able cast. If you like comedy of the spontaneous kind, a kind that makes you laugh in spite of yourself, be sure and see "Stand In." Taken from the story by Clarence Budington Kelland, of Saturday Evening Post fame, it is a riot of fun from start to finish.

For those who like a really good western cowboy picture, "West of Cheyenne" will more than fill the bill. Thrills and spills, action aplenty, with hard riding, quick shooting, hero and bad man and a beautiful girl all wound up in a story as interesting as it is thrilling. Don't miss this double feature. Usual admission. Show starts at 8:30.

The Price of Seed

Many farmers are puzzled about the different prices being asked for seed grain.

The fact is that seeds—Registered and Certified—are of different qualities. The highest priced, in the end, will be found to be the best "buy." The extra quality of the crop will be giving satisfaction long after the extra price has been forgotten.

Winter Feeds For Foals

(Experimental Farm Note)

Horse breeders are continually on the alert to obtain the services of the best sires available, and this is one of the essentials in the production of good farm horses. An other essential of equal importance is this production program is careful feeding. Too frequently young colts and growing horses do not receive the feeds they require for proper development, and in such cases the beneficial effects of good breeding are largely lost, states R. M. Hopper, Dominion Experimental Farm, Brandon, Man.

The average birth weight of foals of the heavier breeds is approximately 130 pounds, and when liberally fed they will attain to half their mature weight when one year old. Foals supplied to colts should be readily digestible, and furnish the nutrients required to promote growth; Protein and minerals are of prime importance. A critical time in the foals life is at weaning time and any feeding practice that will maintain a thrifty condition and promote growth without interruption during this period will be profitable. Oats, bran, timothy, mixed hay, Brandon, the colts at weaning time should be fed about a gallon to a gallon and a half of skim milk daily, when available, in addition to their other rations of hay and grain.

Legume hays such as sweet clover and alfalfa contain more minerals and proteins than timothy hay and are therefore superior. Mixtures of grass and legume hays give better results than when either hay alone is fed alone. Low quality grass, hay or straw contain very little protein or minerals, and consequently these feeds are unsuited for feeding alone to growing foals.

Oats is the standard grain feed for horses and should form the largest percentage of hull in this grain makes it bulky, readily assimilated, and hence a safe feed. Barley and other grains are used for colts they should only be included in the ration in small amounts. For young horses with good teeth there is very little advantage in feeding the grain ing, cooking, or grinding oats. Where separate hay and grain are fed about 10 pounds of oats per 1,000 pounds live weight when one year old. Feeds

ELECTION CARD

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE HOLDEN SCHOOL DIVISION

While many of the rate-payers of the Holden School Division opposed the formation of the larger School District, believing that it would bring about a raise in taxes, nevertheless, we have the unit and it becomes the responsibility of each trustee of the Division to see that each school is conducted as efficiently as possible.

Each trustee should make a careful survey of each school in their sub-division, as soon as elected, and familiarize themselves with the problems of that school. And in one that the greatest amount of service be given for as low a cost as possible. During the year in which the Division has operated there has been some lack of harmony between the Divisional Board, the Local Boards and the Patrons. This condition should be replaced by one of confidence and co-operation before the greatest possible benefit can be expected from our school facilities.

Having consented to become a candidate for the Divisional Board it is my purpose if elected to not every effort towards the removal of this unfortunate, or influence from any other source of organization. I have been actively interested in education and educational methods all my life and welcome the opportunity of working for the best possible education of facilities in the Holden Division.

I will appreciate your support and your vote on the 10th of January, at your acquaintance and co-operation if elected.

GEO. G. ABERNETHY.

LINDBROOK

The Annual Xmas tree and Concert was staged at the School here last Thursday evening, December 22nd. The school was packed with relatives and friends of the pupils who were the actors and actresses in this entertainment. The programme was quite long and consisted of monologues, dialogue, drills, choruses by all the school, but the chief part was "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" which went over well, despite the extreme youth of the artistes. The whole affair was supposed to be a television play released by the L.B.C. studio, from the stage of the School. Mr. R. F. Kortzman being the announcer with "talks" and all. After the concert Santa turned up in traditional garb (Mr. Chas. Mershon) although it wasn't only him that didnn last him, and performed his duties very creditably. The tree was very pretty and there seemed to be heaps of presents, not to mention the heaps of candies, etc., brought by Santa. It was a very nice concert and Miss Hodges and her pupils deserve credit for their efforts, also in the costuming line, which meant a lot of work and time.

Mrs. W. Glenn spent Christmas with her niece Evelyn at her new home.

Mr. Chas. Blake was taken ill on Christmas Eve, we hope it is nothing serious and that he is O.K. for now. Say, Charlie! What a time to get sick, Santa Claus was not enough to know better, look what you miss!

Pretty nearly everyone here has been to the city this week so will just say Lindbrook views the City Lights.

Mr. R. Heichen went to his home at Onoway for Christmas.

Miss V. Phipps also went home to Stettler for Christmas holidays.

Mr. Ivan Bell has been passed quietly in Lindbrook, no "truffle accidents" viz., and its probably due to the rumour told that there were not so many dances or parties as is usual at this season. It certainly was a change from the nice weather per, reding the holidays.

Mr. Reuben Rogers who is a student at the Theological College at

Mr. James McKenzie is also home on a visit to his folks.

Mrs. W. Glenn returned home this week from a visit to the metropolis.

A party was held on New Year's Eve and part of New Year's Day at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Janets and Lindbrook young folk party was in honour of their wedding anniversary and was attended by relatives and friends. A buffet lunch was served after the New Year had been rung in with the appropriate honours that are observed on this occasion, and after that singing and dancing were enjoyed by all. We take this opportunity to wish Mr. and Mrs. Janets many more happy anniversarys.

The Lindbrook folks wish to extend their sincerest sympathy in Mrs. Jimmy Munro (nee Miss Eva Christensen) family on the sad loss of husband and father, who died of pneumonia at Christmas. Mr. Munro was born and has lived here and lived by all who knew him.

Some of the people from Lindbrook attended the funeral at Ryley last week of Mrs. Wynn, who resided last year on the Denis farm. Mrs. Wynn leaves a husband and a family to mourn her loss and was a sister of Mr. Peter Enns, formerly of Lind. brook. The people of the district extend their sympathy to the relatives in their sad bereavement.

Mr. Ted Grenski is away at present on a visit to relatives in Nebraska, U.S.A.

A Statement of receipts and expenditures for the month of December was presented to the council, and ordered to be placed in the minutes of the meeting.

—WHAT DID A.R.C.— BEHIND THE HOG

Well Folks, we are off to another winter of Curling and again we come to the front with a flock of our old chestnuts, and a few new ones. If our efforts in this column are criticised, we must be doing something worthwhile.

Presidents Fred Imler started the meeting and said: "Let me give you a piece of advice." One of the cut ups said, "What's the matter with it, that you are willing to give it to us." To top this off, one of the Town Council said, "Now Gentlemen, I want to say your memory . . ." One of the boys piped up, "Just a minute, I don't think the rink tax is paid yet."

Art Hosier will make the ice, and believe me, Art sure knows his frozen water. The Rings will be in the Club colors, red, white and blue. The Backs are made from standard scrubs and the hog lines are the same distances from the backs as last year. Yes, Folks, we are all ready, and the only hitch in curling, the rink that gets the stones cleaned on the bottom wins.

Several new facts loomed up on opening night, among the strong is noticed Mayor Charlie Swift and his better half, Councillor Bruce, Chapman, Bellamy, Law, then the Managers, the Thawmers and Preachers, Butcher, Baker and Candle Stick Maker, Hard working Stan Burke, Imperial, White Rose, Regina, Lee and Hall staffs, and gobs of other folk. Glen Woods has a "Kid" rink this year; he will support each club and each have a name: Rovers, Ramblers, Strikers, Has Beens, Would Bes, Never Was'es, Rink rats, High Hats. Just pick your own name. THEN if the club standing will know that point. Lets' on we will endeavor to describe the crashing which every smack Lady Curler will wear.

By the way, Geo. McPadzean can handle a tennis racquet, but he also displays a mean curling stick.

Doc met a lady curler and said: "Gosh, don't like the looks of your husband." The lady said, "Neither do I, but he's awfully good to the kids."

And by the way, Curling advice can be had for nothing, and is often worth it.

Fred Imler said he was going to stop smoking on the ice this year, Yeah, what a hope, as long as he doesn't ask us to stop.

And one Ship after looking at an end said, "I couldn't be to worse shape than if I were one of my curlers' hats.

This Week's Brain Wave— Some curlers thiest after fame, and some after money, But, they all thirst after united possible.

A large and enthusiastic crowd filled into the curling rink on the Good Will Curlers from Edmonton on Saturday night. Rinks of Walford skipped the Edmonton rink, while Dr. Law, Bill Chapman, Fred Imler and Charlie Swift skipped the Tofield Ends. The Edmonton men had a most enjoyable evening and Art Cowell's clean-up shot was the highlight of the evening, and we noticed that Pres. Imler had lost some of his vocal chatter.

The boys were kidding each other at the rink and Doc said to Ben. Cowell, "You have a common complaint, "Slippery." Ben said: "Let's find out who has the loads off."

"I'll take you to the District court."

"I'll be there, was the response.

"I'll take you to the Supreme Court."

"I'll be there."

"I'll take you to hell."

"My lawyer will be there."

COMMUNICATION

Dear Editor:

With regard to your article in the Tofield Mercury of January 5th, will you permit me to say that while the conduct of the office of the Municipal District of Cornhill may have a high rating with the Department of Municipal Affairs and the approval of the Editor of the Tofield Mercury, I do not believe that ratepayer values the opinion of the majority of the ratepayers of the Municipality.

Sometime ago two ratepayers and myself presented a petition to the Department of Municipal Affairs, asking for a special audit of the affairs of the Municipality, and signed by 90 ratepayers. The Inspector and the Deputy Minister said that the Municipal Districts act gave the ratepayers the power through their elected councils, to manage the affairs of the Municipality and that the Department did not intend to interfere with the affairs of the Municipality.

When shown that Reeve Glenn, of the Municipal Board, was present and gave a fine address also, speaking along the line of the use of Alberta funds for the purpose for which they are, that of the 74 million manufactured here, only 16 million were enjoyed by our own Alberta people. Note, If Charity begins at home, so should intelligent citizens attending to their affairs.

Has started an investigation of the affairs of the city, I think that the council and the secretary of the M.D. should welcome an investigation of the affairs of the district. If everything was alright it would silence the knockers and if not the ratepayers have a right to know where their taxes go.

The raising of the mill rate in the last few years and the raising of the assessment, and the present debt of over for machinery is not justified considering the inability of the ratepayers to meet the taxes that are necessary, to meet the "so called" high standard of efficiency as shown by the Auditors report of the Cornhill M.D. No. 487, which the Department of Municipal Affairs and Tofield Mercury "To Help Each Other."

RYLEY CREDIT HOUSE OPENED WEDNESDAY

The formal opening of the Ryley Treasury Branch was held in the Community Hall, Ryley, on Wednesday evening, January 11th, 1939.

An excellent crowd hailed this event with enthusiasm and there was a general air of cheerfulness about everyone.

The meeting opened with O! Canada, followed by the Treasr Song.

Mr. E. Magnussen occupied the chair. Dr. McPherson addressed the people speaking on the organization necessary to accomplish any thing, afterwards introducing the right gentlemen, one by one, who are being helped in establishing and carrying out the work of the Great Branch and the Assistant Mr. Ericson of Kingman Agency, Mr. A. J. H. McCauley of Tofield. Mr Seiferd agent at Holden, Mr. Robson, manager of Ryley Branch, Mr. Cox of the Inspection Dept. and Mr. Gray. Each gentleman gave a short address and received applause.

Mr. Geo. Clash, chairman of the Marketing Board, was present and gave a fine address also, speaking along the line of the use of Alberta funds for the purpose for which they are, that of the 74 million manufactured here, only 16 million were enjoyed by our own Alberta people. Note, If Charity begins at home, so should intelligent citizens attending to their affairs be interested.

Another gentlemen, whether addresses were lengthy or brief, spoke encouragingly and hopefully. The thought of the community was always uppermost.

Both Dr. and Mrs. McPherson received praise and a well deserved tribute for their helpfulness in establishing this Branch and Agencies, and the audience added their appreciation by vigorous applause.

Another treat greatly enjoyed were two solos by Mrs. E. Thevenaz of Tofield accompanied by Miss Cleo Wilson.

After the meeting an excellent lunch was served by the Ryley group. Ryley people certainly have shown an energetic forward step in this work, and may we, of the Agency Branches show the same and bend our energies toward the success of this, "To Help Each Other."

"You're Only Young Once"

For next Tuesday, Sharp's Shows presents a picture of special merit. The above sentence has been written before and was proven true and we have no doubt that in the presentation of "You're Only Young Once," it will be proven true once more. "You're Only Young Once" is a "Judge Hardy" picture, one of a number of pictures based upon character created by Aurania Rouverol. The picture is true to life, with family characters and problems that often occur in the average family. It is rich in thrills, laughter and heart throbs and has won general acclaim wherever seen shown. Starring Lewis Stone, Cecilia Parker and Mickey Rooney and complete with a brilliant cast and a deep human interest story, it promises to be one of those outstanding dramatic picture shown here. There will also be the usual interesting newsreel and comedy. Usual prices.

Mr. McLachlan, chairman of the H.C. Board gave a very thorough explanation of the working of the Provincial Treasury Branches.

Opportunity was then given for Questions and Answers, but after the fine addresses given, no disadvantage was taken.

This meeting was enjoyed by everyone. Those interested, but not attending, missed considerable, and those who attended will be glad to be interested.

Many gentlemen, whether addresses were lengthy or brief, spoke encouragingly and hopefully. The thought of the community was always uppermost.

Both Dr. and Mrs. McPherson received praise and a well deserved tribute for their helpfulness in establishing this Branch and Agencies, and the audience added their appreciation by vigorous applause.

The Price of Seed
Many farmers are puzzled about the different prices being asked for seed grain.
The fact is that seeds—Registered and Certified—are of different qualities. The highest priced, in the end, will be found to be the best "buy." The extra quality of the crop will be giving satisfaction long after the extra price has been forgotten.

1938 has probably been one of the most disturbed wheat years in history for Canada and for other wheat exporting countries.

No. 1 Northern at Fort William was 85 cents a bushel lowest at the end of December, 1938, than it was on December 31st, 1937. Only once before, the records show, has a decline during the same period of time been greater, which was 99¼ cents between December, 1925, and December 1926.

Part of the reason for the great price decline of 1 Northern, however, was the fact that during 1937, owing to a great scarcity of that high quality "strength" wheat, its price had risen considerably above all other sorts.

The price of wheat futures at Liverpool, that is, world wheat of average quality, declined during the year, in British sterling, the equivalent of 37 cents a bushel, but in terms of gold the decline was only 25¾ cents a bushel. The lesser fluctuation of the gold price should be good for the thought to those who believe that a proper currency divorced from gold would be more stable than gold as a price measure.

During 1938 several governments took the marketing of wheat out of the hands of merchants and the open markets, and are attempting to sell the wheat through the medium of governmental boards. Some students of international marketing are doubting whether a board composed of a small group even of able, experienced and efficient men can possibly run a market as much wheat, or for as high a price, as could thousands of equally able and experienced merchants who would have their own money invested in the wheat they would be endeavouring to sell at a profit.

Several governments during the year subsidized their wheat exports. Some students consider that this method—which virtually is wheat dumping— hardly tending to lower the world price of wheat, in addition may bring international complications because of the dumping clauses in the customs regulations of many countries.

An important innovation during 1938 also was the netting of a min, imum rates of 60 cents a bushel, basis 1 Northern at Fort William, to prairie wheat growers, this price being equivalent to about 63 cents at the average country point in the West for 1 Northern (which is a bonus averaging about 18 cents a bushel to the farmer). Again election is taking place throughout Canada about the maximum price, the possibility of its continuation, and whether a bonus per bushel is the fairest way of giving assistance to Western farmers.

Japan's invasion of China undoubtedly has curtailed the amount of wheat and flour that China would have imported at present low world prices. On the other hand the fear of war has undoubtedly induced some European countries to lay in extra stocks of wheat.

The world wheat "Carry-over" aside has risen so that by August 1st next there will probably be about 500 million bushels in excess of normal year-end required working stocks. The records of the past tell us, however, that wheat surpluses, even of this size, have always disappeared much sooner than was expected.

An important feature of the year has been the gradual realization by Western people that the world's definite or purchasable demand for Canadian wheat is, and probably will be for some time unless conditions change, considerably less than the amount of the normal annual export-able production of the prairies. Eastern Canadians are beginning to realize that such curtailment of wheat value, if it continues, will have an important effect in harming the welfare and standard of living of all the people in Canada.—Research Department, Searle Grain Company, Ltd.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By K. G. L. Strange, Director "The Crop Testing Plan."

We are now realizing that foreign countries seem unable to buy as much Canadian wheat as we are producing for sale.

For some time I have steadfastly advocated the lowering of Canadian tariffs so as to enable foreign people to sell more of their own goods in Canada, which in turn would enable them to obtain more Canadian dollars with which to buy more of our wheat.

Some, however, have told me they

The Trading Instinct

The vast and complex trading world has its origin in the individual trading instinct of man. The trading instinct is a fundamental. As much a fundamental as music or worship. The first "deal" of course is lost in the ages of time, but the pages of history do not record an era when man's possessions were not traded for other possessions or for what was accepted as money.

Today, amid the activities of giant business corporations individuals have not lost their trading instinct. National and international trade may go on. Large ships, mile-long trains, carry the products of gigantic factories and mills, banks and counting houses compute and calculate, but amid it all the small voice of the individual is often heard saying "For Sale," or "Wanted".

To those with things to sell and for those who desire to buy or trade articles, classified advertisements are the most economical and most effective publicity medium. Read by hundreds of people on the look-out for a trade, a classified advertisement rarely fails to get its man.

Classified advertisement in the Mercury are low in price and have proven quite effective. One week 50c; two weeks 75c; four weeks $1.00. There is a liberal allowance of thirty words.

Edmontonian Attounds U.S. Customs Aide

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 10 — From Kilmorden, Alta., assistant collector of United States customs George Marshall today received $20 and a note explaining it was for goods the anonymous writer had failed to declare while here and which he (or she) believed was owing to the government.

ence that countries such as Germany would not buy more Canadian wheat even though Canada were to purchase more German goods. For my part, I think that such fears are groundless. Canada has a Trade Agreement with Germany, signed at Ottawa on August 22nd, 1936, by which Germany definitely agrees to purchase Canadian goods and products with all the Canadian money she receives as the result of selling German goods and Canada. Furthermore, Germany agreed to buy wheat alone with at least 35 per cent of the Canadian dollars she receives. Inquiries that I have made in Ottawa confirm the fact that Germany has lived scrupulously up to this agreement.

It seems certain, therefore, that as more German goods are admitted into Canada, as automatically will more Canadian wheat be exported to Germany. And the same principle I believe, will apply to many other foreign countries too.

Following factors have tended to raise prices:— Official confirmation of serious Argentine corn situation and unfavourable crop reports. Excellent continuous—France reduces import tax on foreign Durums—Increasing apprehension about crop condition in U.S.— United Kingdom Canadian, American, Australian, Uruguayan and Argentine wheats. Export small Mexican tomato shipments.

Following factors have tended to lower prices:— Substantial Danubian wheat shipments continue — Severe frosts in Western Europe clear weeds and vermin— Argentina believed to have sold considerable quantity of wheat to English millers—Light rains reported in important Punjab region of India—Grain sorghum crop in Colorado one of largest ever produced.

Duck Transfer Sanctioned By Commissioner

Although officials of the provincial fish and game department are skeptical of the proposal to transfer the 600 ducks stranded on Buffalo Lake south by truck," permission was granted Tuesday to Ducks Unlimited, conservation organization, to proceed with the plan. The government, however, retained the ownership of the birds.

"In spite of the fact that the provincial game department branch is skeptical as to the practicability of the above proposal, the division has agreed to issue a permit to Ducks Unlimited allowing them to attempt this experiment.

"Consideration was given to the whole thing after full investigation and it was decided that it would be as well to allow this experiment to be tried, as it seemed obvious, in the face of facts, that the only alternative was that the ducks would die of starvation.

"As the open water left in the lake is Buffalo Lake is under two feet in diameter and three being still over five hundred ducks, it is impossible for them all to get into the water at one time, the result being that many of the ducks spending periods on ice in a damp condition, and through lack of proper nourishment, have not the vitality to death.

"The government has further decided by granting to Ducks Dallon, free of charge, the services of George Pick-up, caretaker of the Inglewood bird sanctuary.

"It is noted that all these ducks will be carefully banded before release, and that this is principally this detail of the experiment with which Pickering will be concerned.

Surgeon's Hand Pumps Heart Stopped In Rare Operation

WINNIPEG, Jan 10—John T. Dakin, 37-year-old truck driver of Ogema, Sask., is recovering in hospital here from the unusual hand of an unnamed surgeon reached through an incision in Dakin's back and pumped his heart when it stopped momentarily during a long operation.

The doctor continued hand-pumping for several seconds until drug was injected into the heart muscles and normal pulsation restored. "It was all over in one minute," he told me," Dakin said in reporters Monday. "I don't even remember entering or leaving the operating room.

"They say I should be able to get out of hospital within a couple of weeks," he said.

Unusual Operation

The operation was unusual, said the hospital superintendent, Dr. G. F. Stephens, because the entire chest cavity left lobe of the lung had to be amputated. Incision was made in the patient's back, about 10 inches of ribs were removed and other ribs spread in order to allow the surgeon to reach within.

All went well until the time came to apply a tourniquet to the lung. Suddenly the heart stopped. There was no breathing and no pulse. Apparently the patient was dead.

Amputation Follows

The surgeon, however, calmly reached into the incision, grasped the heart in his hand and began pumping until the adrenalin had been injected. Then normal pulsation returned and amputation of the lung was performed.

Infection in Dakin's lung began with pleurisy years ago and gradually became chronic. He was admitted to hospital here December 8 for treatment preparatory to his operation, December 30.

Four Of War Holiday Back Better Times

MONTREAL, Jan. 10— Unemployment is not the greatest problem in Canada, Hon. James G. Gardiner, Federal minister of agriculture, told the Montreal Ministerial Association last night. "If the prices of the world could be ensured for 12 months the unemployment problem of this country and of the world would sink into insignificance," he said.

Asked to explain how he meant that "Fundamentally unemployment is not a problem at all," Mr. Gardiner said that with free and mutual trading the world, every country was trying to make itself self-sufficient, and that some countries were living on war rations to ensure self-sufficiency.

"If peace were assured in the world, we could sell our wheat, bring money into the country to produce like throughout Canada," he said. "If peace were assured, Britain would be using some of her great financial resources to develop Canada's great natural resources.

"Western Canada there is a great potential scope for industrial growth. Half the mineral wealth, half the coal of the country will be mined in an area close to the Rocky Mountains, but there are no industries there. Development there would create great wealth."

Sold First Tickets From 'Peg Depot

When Charlie Tyndall, City Ticketmaster, Winnipeg, was rummaging around in a file of old papers the other day, he came across a couple of documents he now prizes highly. They were nothing to look at, but relics are usually satisfactory documents to have around in any man's home. They are a little different, Sold.

They were receipts for the first Canadian Northern and first Grand Trunk Pacific tickets sold from the Union Depot, Winnipeg. Charlie was a ticket clerk in the Union Depot at the time and the tickets were dated August 7, 1911 over Canadian Northern and August 8, 1911 over Grand Trunk. The ticket read from Winnipeg to Brainerd, Minn.

A Good Suggestion

Among the promising proposals discussed at Winnipeg last week was one that a Western Canada division of the National Research Council should be established at once to conduct research into new uses for wheat and other farm products. The provision of a research laboratory at some point in the prairie provinces was urged.

This has been followed by the suggestion of the North-West Grain Dealers' Association that an international research laboratory should be set up in London, staffed by internationally famous cereal chemists, to seek a solution of the recurring wheat surplus problem. The International Wheat Advisory Committee meets in London on January 10 and includes representatives of all the wheat exporting countries.

This latest plan to find new industrial uses for wheat and other grains includes, as well as a central laboratory in London, the establishment of similar research facilities in all countries where the disposal of wheat has become a national problem. Canada is thus giving the lead in a movement that promises rich results, for it is recognized that unwieldy world wheat surpluses may be here to stay for a long time unless radical measures are adopted to discover outlets for wheat or for wheat. —Calgary Herald.

Warn Motorist Of Poison Danger

Warning of the danger of carbon monoxide is again drawn to the attention of car drivers by officials of the Alberta Motor Association.

Just recently two more deaths were reported in this province from monoxide poisoning, which serves again as a grim reminder to motorists that every care should be used when operating a car at this time of the year.

"When the car is started in the garage these carcinogen, make certain that the garage door is open and plenty of fresh air available. When motoring, it is a good practice to have a window open to carry off any carbon monoxide that may be present," said an official.

In older types of cars the danger of carbon monoxide should be care, fully guarded against.

Each year numerous deaths occur in the dominion on account of carbon monoxide fumes in cars. The toll can be largely reduced by motorists taking every possible precaution to guard against this danger, according to A.M.A. officials.

MR. BENNETT'S FAREWELL—

FAREWELLS are generally melancholy events. Even though people know life will go on the same as usual and that the friend whose departure they regret will in time, be replaced by other friends, and previous happy days spent with the departing one, become but a memory. But Mr. Bennett's farewell tour is just a little different. There is, of course, real regret at his departure from public life and from Canada, but his farewell tour of the West has become something akin to a triumphant march. At every city he goes he is feted and people of all political beliefs turn out to do him honor. Mr. Bennett's public career has been a colorful one. Possessed of a dynamic personality and a forceful nature, combined with a steadfastness of purpose for what he considered the good of Canada, Mr. Bennett rose up and up until in the early 1930's he was the leading political figure in Canada, Canada's Prime Minister. Now despite the battles that had to be fought and won—and lost—former political friends and foes alike make haste to do him honor and overwhelm him with good wishes.

Time marches on in its unfailing stride. And among the multitude things things heard and seen by the individual, a few stand out brilliantly clear among others. And as we recently read in the daily press and heard over the radio the eulogistic phrases accorded Mr. Bennett, we recalled attending a political meeting in the town of Didsbury in 1909 or 10, at which a comparatively young, well built but spare man was the principal speaker. The speaker spoke very fast, he was very earnest and worked himself into an oratorical fervor. Leading up to climax a verbal point, words came so fast as to be indistinguishable. Suddenly a stopped shook, smiled, and said, "my thoughts are coming faster than I can speak". We remember the speaker as Mr. Bennett. Years later from Winnipeg over the air, and still later from Ottawa, we heard Mr. Bennett speak again. His speeches from Ottawa during the past federal campaign were, quite irresponsive as to how we stood on the policies, real high-lights in the art of oratory. It is quite likely that much of the effort given by Mr. Bennett to the welfare of Canada did not meet the public eye. But in the cities where meetings could be attended and in the small towns and on the farms where radios were available, Mr. Bennett will long be remembered as a brilliant speaker as well as an able administrator.

Mr. Bennett leaves Canada soon to take up residence in England. His home, we understand, will be in Surrey. He could hardly have picked a more picturesque spot. The climate will be less rigorous than Canada, yet lacking the continuous balminess of Southern California. There will be delightful rides and more delightful walks. In the spring the hills will be a riot of color, with huge banks of bluebells across emerald green valleys. There will be pathways leading to sheltered ponds in which magnificently proud swans propel themselves gracefully to and fro and gaze quizzically at passers by. In the branches of the trees birds will be singing joyously and over all there will be a natured mellowness which is comforting and restful, yet inspiring. And there will be London close by, which to a man having spent a large portion of his life amid the clatter of statecraft will mean more than an ordinary big city attraction.

We wish Bennett's leaves Canada with the well wishes of its people going with him.

Famous Speaker Initiates New "Mike"

Western Garden Of International Peace

TO GOD IN HIS GLORY. We your nations dedicate this garden and pledge ourselves that as long as man shall live we will not take up arms against one another."

This is the inscription on the tablet of the Peace Cairn which stands on the international boundary between the United States and Canada in the International Peace Garden in the heart of the Turtle Mountains of Manitoba and North Dakota. The cairn which was unveiled in 1932 in the presence of 50,000 people at the dedication of the Peace territory is one of the many tokens in the cause of peace between the peoples of the United States and Canada.

Long before the advent of the white man, the Indians named the Turtle Mountains owing to their resemblance in outline to a huge, recumbent turtle. In a sense the Turtles are not mountains but until in the early 1930's he was the leading political figure in Canada, Canada's Prime Minister. Now- despite the battles that had to be fought and won—and lost—former political friends and foes alike make haste to do him honor and overwhelm him with good wishes.

Suddenly a stopped shook, smiled, and said, "my thoughts are coming faster than I can speak". We remember the speaker as Mr. Bennett. Years later from Winnipeg over the air, and still later from Ottawa, we heard Mr. Bennett speak again. His speeches from Ottawa during the past federal campaign were, quite irresponsive as to how we stood on the policies, real high-lights in the art of oratory. It is quite likely that much of the effort given by Mr. Bennett to the welfare of Canada did not meet the public eye. But in the cities where meetings could be attended and in the small towns and on the farms where radios were available, Mr. Bennett will long be remembered as a brilliant speaker as well as an able administrator.

Mr. Bennett leaves Canada soon to take up residence in England. His home, we understand, will be in Surrey. He could hardly have picked a more picturesque spot. The climate will be less rigorous than Canada, yet lacking the continuous balminess of Southern California. There will be delightful rides and more delightful walks. In the spring the hills will be a riot of color, with huge banks of bluebells across emerald green valleys. There will be pathways leading to sheltered ponds in which magnificently proud swans propel themselves gracefully to and fro and gaze quizzically at passers by. In the branches of the trees birds will be singing joyously and over all there will be a natured mellowness which is comforting and restful, yet inspiring. And there will be London close by, which to a man having spent a large portion of his life amid the clatter of statecraft will mean more than an ordinary big city attraction.

We wish Bennett's leaves Canada with the well wishes of its people going with him.

TESTED RECIPES

CHOOSING AND COOKING MEAT

One of the bewildered problems in several countries is the knowledge that the quality of beef in a butcher's shop is not always easy to determine. Canada, however, is no exception. In the Dominion there is no necessity for any concern in that direction, provided the meat to be purchased is branded or graded beef. Graded beef (or branded beef as some persons call it) bears the Government's guarantee of quality of which there are two grades. The first grade is known as "Choice" each cut bearing a portion of the red ribbon-like mark which runs from one end of each side of the carcass to the other. The second grade is the "Good" grade or brand, stamped with a blue ribbon-like mark after the manner of the choice grade.

Thus, buying beef by grade takes the hazard out of marketing. The record official "Canada" mark of Government inspection guarantees not only that the meat is wholesome and free from disease. Good beef may be tough. Therefore, the grade marks—red and blue ribbons—are the only guarantees of quality. The grades are chosen for quality from Government inspected meat.

The following recipes are taken from the 32-page illustrated pamphlet "Beef and How to Choose and Cook It", which may be obtained free on application from the Publicity and Extension Division, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa:

Rolled Stuffed Flank

Ask flank steak to form pocket, or if the flank be thin, fold one-half over the other, and fill with poultry or other dressing. To wide strips of onions. Brush with drippings, or melted butter and bake in covered roaster for one hour, or in open pan, for 1½ hours. If cooked in open pan, baste several times during cooking. A few slices of breakfast bacon may be placed on top of meat 10 minutes before serving.

Short Rib Broward

To four or five pounds of short ribs add one large onion quartered; cover with boiling water and boil for ten minutes. Reduce heat and simmer for one hour. Remove ribs to roasting pan and place in hot oven for from one-half to three-quarters of an hour, or until the ribs are nicely browned. Pastry potatoes may be included during this latter period, if desired. The liquor in which the ribs were boiled and serve as gravy.

Roast Lamb

Remove fat and tissue from 1¼ lb. of round or shoulder steak and mountain lamb. Add 1 cup of cereal, 1 cup bread crumbs, 1 egg beaten with 3 tablespoons water, ¼ teaspoon pepper, 1 teaspoon salt. Mix thoroughly and pack in well-greased bowl. Cover bowl closely and steam for one and one-half hours. When cooked, drain off any moisture which may have collected, invert meat on platter and serve hot with red currant jelly or cranberry sauce.

Snow For Poultry

(Experimental Farms News)

The problem of supplying water for poultry in winter is solved in one during winter months, especially for those who have only a small flock as a side-line to other larger enterprise.

It can be overcome by the use of heated thermos drinking fountains or vessels in accordance with the natural beauty of the vicinity. In the near future the building of the Peace Tower and other memorials will be undertaken. During the past year, collectively speaking, the national boundary as the line of demarcation. In fact, on the United States portion, important accomplishments continue. The lodge with dining room and kitchen facilities, as well as a number of tourist cabins and picnic shelters. The amphitheatre for meetings has been extended.

On the Northern, or Manitoba side, the work has been in charge of the Department of Public Works of Manitoba Province, as approved by the directors of the garden and with the officers of the Dominion Experimental Station at Morden, Manitoba, as consultants. The winding driveway through woodlands of birch, poplar, elm, oak, and ash has been cut graded, gravelled, and joined to the main drive along the formal area. The driveway trail is between three and four miles long. Rolling drives, hill across alder, willow, dogwood, and viburnum valleys, about meadows and around bends of the landscape and up hillsides of rare natural beauty. On the western side the trail crosses an earthen dam which backs up a 25 feet deep lake which will be used for irrigation of the formal gardens, and further along the drive are numerous other lakes.

The master plan of the formal gardens having been completed and approved by the two governments, space has been cleared preparatory for the lodge and shrub planting. Around the cairn there are gravel walks and a drive and the first two units are due for planting in early spring, so that the first effort at permanent planting and garden display commence in 1939.

Romance Of More Than 11 Years To Culminate On Viking Alta., Farm

MONTREAL, Jan. 9 — Eleven years' steady correspondence with the man who had been their "best friend" for three years before he left Wales in 1927 with his parents to settle on an Alberta farm, brought Miss Sarah Tomlinson, 31, to Montreal today from her native Wales to marry Joseph Jones, 33, Viking district, Alberta.

There will be no immediate wedding, said Miss Tomlinson, who added they would wait two or three months until she found whether she would like living on a western Canada farm. "It is better to find that out first than be heart-broken afterwards," she said, smiling.

But Miss Tomlinson expects to like Canada. She has found Canadians "so kind" to her and on the liner Antonia which brought her to Canada she met several English-born residents of Canada who had no desire ever to return to their native land again. But on her train journey so far she has found the country "so strange, with little houses so far apart from each other."

Already Miss Tomlinson doesn't want to return to Britain if it means such a rough crossing as she had coming from Glasgow. "It was terrible," she said. "Chairs would go out from under you, tables slide a way, and everything seemed to be upside down. During one day and night I thought I'd never see land again. I thought I'd never be able to go through another day and night like that."

Miss Tomlinson might have accompanied the Jones family to Canada in 1927 except that her mother was ill. "I met Joseph when I was 17 and he was my boy friend for three years until he left with his wife family to come out here," she said, and "I could not have come out with them then, I wouldn't leave my mother. She died a year later. Joseph and I have corresponded ever since he left, and he was going to send for me in summer, but the crops sometimes didn't turn out well. Then last October he wrote me to be ready to leave as soon as my ticket arrived.

"Everything has been a rush since then. And I've been a bit frightened at times, but people have been so nice and my father savved with me that even though it was a gamble, we all have to make a gamble at least once in our lives."

One worry Miss Tomlinson has is that possibly Mr. Jones has been reading the English newspapers. "They make up all sorts of stories, said I was going to be married in a February, one of them even named the date," she said. "Why they know my business better than I did."

Locals Lose To Irma 7-1

In a fast, hard fought game at Irma on Monday night, the Tofield senior hockey team lost by a score of 7-1. The score hardly indicates the run of the game, Tofield having their fair share of ice play. Their small score was due to lack of finish around the net and the clever work of the Irma goalie.

An Honest Firm at Last

The professor had called at nine shops in town for his hot walking-stick and had found it in the last.

"Thank you so much indeed," he beamed, as he took possession of it. "Do you know, this must be one of the few honest places in town? I've called at nine shops already and in each I was told that they hadn't got it."—Edinburgh Dispatch.

The Longer the Quicker

"How long does it take you to prepare one of your speeches?" asked a friend of President Wilson.

"That depends on the length of the speech," answered the President. "If it is a 10-minute speech, it takes me all of two weeks to prepare it; if it is a half hour speech, it takes me a week; if I can talk as long as I want to, it requires no preparation at all, I am ready now."

Magician Outgrossed

BOSTON, Jan. 9—Blackstone the Magician learned a trick Sunday. Displaying his ingenuity at Children's hospital, the magician called off an act in which a rabbit, after being pulled from a hat and wrapped in newspaper disappeared completely—so completely that Blackstone couldn't find it. He finally left with, out it. A little later Robert McConnell, eight, of Brookline, pulled the rabbit out from under the covers of his bed. The children named it Henry but nurses decreed it could not live in the ward.

"What a fine boy! Can he say anything yet?"

"Yes, We've taught him to say 'Thank you' every time anyone puts money in his bank."

LINDBROOK

A Wedding Dance in honor of the "latest local newlyweds" Mr. and Mrs. Emil Tiedeman (nee Miss Martha Gombosh), daughter of one of our old timers, Mr. Emil Gombosh) was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Tiedeman here last Friday evening. Despite the snowy roads a large crowd assembled. The local orchestra supplied the music and everyone had a real good time. A dainty lunch was served and after that the dance continued until dawn. We wish to take this opportunity to extend the best wishes of the Lindbrook folks to the young couple who have been known to most of us from infancy and wish them health, wealth, happiness and a long life together.

The annual election of school trustees for this division of the Held, on S.D. 2 took place on Tuesday afternoon, January 10th, at the school here. The voting have turned out as follows: Mr. Yager 26; Mr. Glenn, 19; Mr. Abernethy, 7; Mrs. Thornley, 3; and one spoiled ballot. The result and Mr. Glenn conducted the polling, and quite a few turned out, some of whom didn't vote.

EFFICIENCY PLUS

It is said that a visitor to Canada was overheard to say that as he could see, the only ones who worked in this country were the women and the horses. This was in the days before the horse and buggy days. The following story told by Mr. MacLachlan in Ryley on Wednesday night, may illustrate one part of the visitor's statement.

One day a farm housewife was sitting out on the veranda. Both men and feet she rocked the cradle in which lay the sleeping baby. With the other foot, she kept the treadle of the churn, all the while, knitting vigorously on a sweater.

On the spot, supporting the verandah, was tacked her speech, to be delivered at the next women's meeting and she committed this to memory along with her other labors.

This was in the days when homemade cheese was often on the menu and had to be pressed, so she sat on a stool to expedite the process.

Now, ladies of Tofield! how about those people who state emphatically that "the olden days were best." Well! we have time to wonder nowdays anyway.

Orrie R. Burnett.

Bryan Grover Wrests Wife From Russia

LONDON, Jan. 9— Bryan Grover brought home yesterday the wife for whom he made an endurance, transcontinental flight into Soviet Russia.

The Russian world loves a lover, so it made no difference that the Londoner-engineer was in the uncomfortable position of losing bride.

The home folks had read about Grover's unsharp flight in a dilapidated, creased hand sport plane from Stockholm to Russia to claim the Russian-born wife he hadn't seen in five years.

They also had read how Grover flew right into a Soviet prison where he spent six weeks before Soviet authorities became touched by the romance of his escapade and let him off lightly for the one-man "invasion." Officials fined him $200 and confiscated his plane.

Crowds followed Grover and his wife, the former Elena Petrovna, everywhere they went—first in a London hotel and then to their new apartment in the city and later in the English countryside.

Grover obligingly kissed his wife for the photographers. He said he was in the air 6½ hours in the flight which carried him 12 to a pasture 100 miles from Moscow.

—WHAT DID A.B.C. BEHIND THE HOG

One curler asked Pres. Imlay what was his opinion on how the Rink was going this year, and he replied, "Same as yours."

After watching the women curl, we pause to remark that the plural of women—is Widows.

A little tip from Old Man Master of Curling (Geo. McLaughlin) for both ladies and men. When curling stay on the ice, and when not curling, stay on the board walk. This keeps your ice clean, and also your mind on the game, the less dirt on the ice, the less runs you have.

And boys, when you hear two ships calling each other here, it is only fair and polite to assume that they're both right.

Curling rocks are like a wheelbarrow, you have to push 'em to make 'em go. And most ships are like grass widows, hard to skim.

Defeat isn't bitter if you don't swallow it, and compliments are like real rink. The game was featured by casualties, first C. Worten, then Jack Swift, then Jack Dunn having to go off for repairs, However with interruptions the game proceeded to a finish with the score 5-2 in favor of McKenzie in an exciting session.

Dog With Bleeding Foot Goes To Doctor

Here is a dog story which will make you wonder the many dog owners are doing.

Dr. Atkin one day heard a noise at his front office door as if someone were having difficulty getting in. He went to see who was there and found a beautiful liver and black colored dog with long drooping ears, standing on three legs.

The paw on the other leg was badly cut and blood soaked. The dog raised it imploringly and could not have said, "Please Doctor, look at my paw," any plainer. Of course he was attended to, and after being fixed up he climbed upon the doctor's couch and fell asleep.

The dog was Nick and belongs to Ike Mills. Nick is one of four pedigreed Mountain Lion dogs, imported for the pure sport and fun to hunt those wiley animals. Podhar, Jois and Rennie are the names of the other three and their names with their forefathers can be found in the American Register of Pure-Bred Dogs.

These dogs are taught to chase mountain lions only, and will never turn aside for a deer or rabbit. True to their sense of smell they will follow a lion track until they drop from fatigue. It is not an uncommon occurrence for them to come in days after a hunt, having run clear of their master. This is often the case in the country close to Banff with its heavy windfalls and mountains which make it impossible for the hunter to keep up with the chase.

Last winter Ike succeeded in killing several lions. This winter he has been out hunting again. On a quick visit to Banff recently, he found a letter from the Park Superintendent's office, notifying him that hounds were not allowed in the Park and that he would have to get rid of his dogs.

Everyone in Banff knows Ike's dogs. They are harmless as far as game laws are concerned. If they chased other animals he would un-doubtedly be the first to destroy them. He is the only lion hunter in the Park and values the game accordingly. Yet, he is bounded to a finish by France, Canada, Italy, Argentina, and Germany, Russia, Australia, Spain, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Wales, Ireland, Holland, Belgium, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and Finland are all producing far larger quantities of wheat than ever before. Even Japan, Korea and China are increasing the killing of lions in the Park Turkey, Poland, Jugoslavia, Hungary, and other places. —Banff Crag and Canyon.

Plan Big Highway Program For 1939

Alberta is to experience the great, est amount of road progress this year ever seen in the history of this province, according to a recent statement by Hon. W. A. Fallow, minister of public works.

While the annual expenditures of this department will not be known until passed by the provincial legislature at the session which opens on Feb. 9, it is believed that there will be large sums for road improvements this year.

The department is pressing ahead with its "black top" or hard surfacing of main highways and plans to complete an extensive mileage this year. This program will include surfacing of the 65-mile stretch between Red Deer and Crossfield, which was reconstructed last year at an estimated cost of $350,000. When this job is completed, there will be a hard surfaced main road from Edmonton to the international boundary. This year's program also is to include surfacing of the Jasper highway, on which reconstruction was begun in the fall of 1938.

Officials of the Alberta Motor Association have been assured by the Minister of Public Works that it is his firm intention to undertake extensive road work this year.

In addition, the province is negotiating with Ottawa over a joint scheme to build a winter road from Fort Vermilion to Hay River on Great Slave lake, at an estimated cost of $200,000, to serve the Yellowknife mining field.

Principal Producers Of Wheat

In the Golden Jubilee Number of the Corn Trade News it was stated that in 1901 the crop returns of the principal nations of the world placed the producers of wheat in the following order: United States of America, Russia, France, India, Austro-Hungary, Germany, Italy, Canada, United Kingdom, Australia, Argentina, Belgium, Holland, Sweden and Denmark.

This order in 1938 was as follows: Russia, United States, China, India, Argentina, Canada, Australia, France, Italy, Germany, Rumania, Austro-Hungary, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Spain, Jugoslavia, Hungary, Holland, Belgium, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and Finland are all producing far larger quantities of wheat than ever before. Even Japan, Korea and China are increasing their history and endeavoring, so far as possible, to become self-supporting. —Wheat Pool Budget.

The Electric Fence

(Experimental Farms News)

The introduction of the electric fence into Canada has been, resulting with much interest and it is gradually becoming more widely adopted for fencing pastures, states H. J. Kemp, Dominion Experimental Station, Swift Current, Sask. This type of fence has many advantages, but at the same time caution is necessary in establishing the equipment. Research and further investigation will, no doubt, improve the safety features, its efficiency and general range of usefulness.

1. Reduces the cost of erecting temporary fences.

2. Reduces expenditures for wire, posts and gates.

3. Reduces injury to livestock.

4. Especially adapted to winding corners in temporary pasture areas otherwise impractical to fence.

5. Enables the use of unutilized land in fields that otherwise might be neglected.

Three types of electric fence controls are in use. Two employ direct current of either six volts or 110 volts. The third uses alternating current of 110 volts. Regulations do not always permit connecting the alternating current electric fence controls to ordinary local light and power lines. The six volt direct current battery is considered the safest device to use.

Direct electric current of six volts may be supplied to the battery operated types by either four dry cells, a hot shot battery, or a wet storage battery. The fence control equipment increases the pressure of the current from the cells to a range of from 350 to 10,000 volts. This high volt, low amperage current is applied to the fence wire at a very low volume of from 10 to 15 milliamperes at regular intervals of 50 to 60 times per minute. The intermittent application of electric current conserves the battery current. This intermittent current, together with the very low amperage, are excellent provisions for safety.

Protest Livestock Re-ding Highways

Practice in some parts of the country of allowing livestock to roam the highways has met with strong condemnation on the part of motor organizations when discussing this problem at their annual meetings.

Some time ago, this matter was the subject of strong representations which were made to the government of this province by the Alberta Motor Association. Undoubtedly the improvement in conditions through the enforcement of laws and regulations by municipal authorities is due to a great extent from the A.M.A. protests.

Nevertheless, there are still districts in this province where livestock roam the highways at will constituting a danger to life and property on the highways. This is a condition that should be remedied without delay. In the opinion of officials of the A.M.A.

Attention to general conditions south of the border was drawn at the annual meeting of the American Automobile Association, which passed a resolution urging its affiliated clubs and state associations to conduct vigorous campaigns to end the menace of livestock on the highways.

High voltages applied at amperages higher than 15 to 20 milliamperes are regarded as dangerous to both humans and animals and competent advice is recommended where any doubt exists.

Some makes of electric fence controls measure the voltage applied to determine the voltages to suit wet or dry soil conditions, a meter for testing the battery, and means to indicate short circuit in the fence line, a lightning arrester and a condenser to reduce radio interference.

As a rule, one or two wires are used for the electric fence to carry the electric current. One wire is sufficient for horses and cattle. Two wires are considered preferable for pigs and sheep. Barbed wire is more suitable than smooth wire although the latter can be used where barbed wire is especially objectionable. The wire can be supported by porcelain insulators on 8 inch by 8 inch stakes set in the ground 30 to 40 feet apart.

Animals as a rule need little training to keep them away from the charged fence. Observations at the Dominion Experimental Station at Swift Current show that they learn surprisingly quickly and keep away from the fence for long periods even when such a fence is not charged. A 12-plate wet battery was used and the electric fence was operated throughout the summer months for pastering cattle. The cattle were well controlled, no harm was done to either cattle or the attendant and the battery was still charged at the end of the season.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By R. L. Bishop, Director "The Crop Testing Plan."

"My farm is in an area where good rainfall is none too sure, and now and again we have a crop failure because of drought. There is no chance on my place of making a dam or providing irrigation. If I could only find some way of growing each year enough grain for seed and feed, I believe I could get along."

This is a statement which I have frequently heard from farmers during the recent drought years; but there is a plan which I have often suggested for use in drought areas that I have tried myself, and which works well.

I recommend a certain number of acres each year to be double-summerfallowed. This means that the field set aside will be kept in summerfallow, black, without producing a crop, for two years instead of one year only. The following years follow. In this way two whole years of rainfall will be accumulated, and in the worst conditions of drought I have found that a fair and usually a good crop is harvested.

The loss of a few acres for one year is a splendid insurance for the seed and food supply for the home and farmers are worried about.

Following factors have tended to raise price: Indian drought situation becoming increasingly serious; shortage of grain supplies indicated —Dutch government reduces import of rye; also Poland and Finland; damage owing to cold snap and insufficient winter covering.—Further deterioration ;; U.S.A. winter wheat belt; moisture need increases—Uncertainties, European political situation.

Following factors have tended to depress price: Reduction in Argentina benefit late seeded corn— Uruguay reported to have large wheat surplus; export offering at big figures.—Australia enhance of crp in Germany—Food grain supply on U.S. farms on January 1st heaviest for many years—Rains improve East African coffee crop.

"BIG HEADACHE"

From Ottawa come reports that the wheat problem is a "big headache" to the federal government. The cabinet, worried by the prospect of a substantial loss because of the minimum price of 80c a bushel to wheat growers, is striving to devise schemes, or to put methods of marketing which would involve smaller losses, and possibly shift the burden of wheat from its shoulders.

It is no secret that the government longs to get out of the wheat business. A prominent Ottawa newspaper correspondent writes: nothing that any government has done to date in interfering with, or attempting to palliate world depression of wheat prices has achieved any permanent objective.

One of the proposed alternatives is said to be putting the Wheat Pools back on the job of co-operative marketing, with a government guarantee of a minimum price at a certain percentage below world market level. Another alternative is a sliding scale of government guaranteed payments on a percentage of normally cultivated acreage instead of seeded land, these payments to increase as the world price level of wheat fell below a fixed level.

Still another is to put the Wheat Pools back in the marketing end with government guarantees. The latter idea is intriguing. With a world carryover in readiness than ever before recorded in history in prospect next mid-summer, it is a question whether even a government guaranteed price would entice the Pools back into the marketing field. There are substantial grounds to believe that no marketing system that can be devised outside of a government Wheat Board can stand up against the fierce world competition, the ever-clouded markets, and the low world wheat prices, and still give the wheat producers a decent return for their grain.—Wheat Pool Bulletin.

Snow Conservation For Vegetables

(Experimental Farms News)

Prairie blizzards deposit irregular drifts of snow inside the garden shelter of trees. Observing that only a portion of the garden area was covered at the Dominion Experimental Station at Scott, Sask., it was planned to determine the effect of the snow conservation of vegetables. Supt. D. Mantyre, the Superintendent of the Station. Accordingly the same varieties of certain vegetables were sown where drifts accumulated and where the land was swept bare of snow by strong winds. When snow drifts accumulate in early winter on level cultivated land, there is usually no frozen ground beneath and the snow water soaks in. But the ground except in a rare spring of rapid thawing.

The first observation was a more uniform stand of vegetables where snow accumulates. All parts of the plant indicated more rapid growth, particularly in a dry summer. The certain largest root development resulted in the plant to move fully utilize rains which may be received during the summer on the prairie. Tenderness and quality of the vegetable are greatly improved by the continuous growth with adequate moisture. Where snow water penetrated, yields have been increased three to ten times, depending on the class of vegetable. The effects are always good except when spring and summer precipitations are scanty. Adequate snow cover guarantees a crop of quality vegetables in the sheltered prairie garden.

This suggests that the whole garden would be improved if there was no snow conservation. Accordingly, a snow plough was designed to ridge the snow before drifting takes place. In fact, extensive tests are being made by this procedure to determine the effect on soil moisture conservation for field crops. A blue print and construction details of a workable snow plough for fields may be obtained by writing to the Dominion Experimental Station, Scott, Sask.

"DUST MORE" BUTTER

One of the most practical resolutions that Canadian homemakers may make is to promise themselves that they will buy and use more butter. From a consumer standpoint butter is one of the best values on the market at the present time. To appreciate the full return received when butter is purchased, it is only necessary to bring to mind a few undisputed facts about this superior fat. As a health food, butter is high butter is another outstanding characteristic, the excellent flavour of good butter is a striking proof to the enjoyment of foods on which or in which it is used.

Why not resolve to use butter more generously? Spread it more thickly on the bread and make it the regular shortening for cakes, cookies and other delicacies made in the home.

The Trading Instinct

The vast and complex trading world has its origin in the individual trading instinct of man. The trading instinct is a fundamental. As much a fundamental as music or worship. The first "deal" of course is lost in the ages of time, but the pages of history do not record an era when man's possessions were not traded for other possessions or for what was accepted as money.

Today, amid the activities of giant business corporations individuals have not lost their trading instinct. National and international trade may go on. Large ships, mile-long trains, carry the products of gigantic factories and mills, banks and counting houses compute and calculate, but amid it all the small voice of the individual is often heard saying "For Sale," or "Wanted".

To those with things to sell and for those who desire to buy or trade articles, classified advertisements are the most economical and most effective publicity medium. Read by hundreds of people on the look-out for a trade, a classified advertisement rarely fails to get its man.

Classified advertisements in the Mercury are low in price and have proven quite effective. One week 50c; two weeks 75c; four weeks $1.00. There is a liberal allowance of thirty words.

THE ROYAL VISIT—

WHILE THEIR stay in the immediate vicinity of Edmonton will be brief, the visit to the capital city of Alberta of Their Majesties King George VI and Queen Elizabeth in June will be the premier event of the year for the province of Alberta. Visits of Royalty are always attended by much ceremony, flag waving, and civic decoration, and undoubtedly this one will, by a wide margin, out-do any previous records along this line for Alberta. To many people a Royal visit is an event of a life-time, and to those people steeped in the tradition of imperialism, nothing quite assumes the importance of a Royal visit. No expense must be spared no effort discounted to make the event a worthy one, an event to be long remembered and much talked of. To others there is a sense of futility regarding the expense connected with such visits. They contrast the glamor and show, the glitter and color and the lavish expenditure, with poverty stricken people and homes.

Whenever the subject is seriously discussed it is generally approached from two opposite extremes. One a general condemnation of all kinds of spectacular celebration and the other that all effort and expense must be directed toward making the event the most momentous of its kind in history. But there is a middle course that can be taken. One that will accord full honor, respect and appreciation of the visit to their Majesties and at the same time recognize the importance and dignity of common citizenship.

It is to be hoped that the forthcoming visit to Alberta of their Majesties will be attended by ideal weather. The early part of June is generally ideal and wonderful days and still more wonderful evenings are the order. State ceremonies do not touch the lives of the average prairie farmer as intimately as they do the lives of city dwellers, and economically it is difficult for them to realize how farmers sowing and reaping in this district are going to benefit from the royal visit. But it is a safe guess in an indirect manner they will. Perhaps not every farmer, but as a community there are bound to be economic advantages. In larger cities state ceremonial occasions create much employment. It is surprising how many avenues of trade are heightened by state ceremonials. Trade in jewelry, clothing, bunting, chinaware, decoration, engineering, food etc., all take on a little more speed on such occasions. This feature is the chief argument of those in favor of such events against those who deplore the lavish expenditure when many people are in want. Thus if money spent by governments and civic bodies, incorporated companies etc., through many channels reach workers in many lines and these workers with this money buy an extra pound of butter a week for a few weeks the extra demand will most likely raise the price a cent or so and prairie farmers milking cows would likely receive a few more cents on their cream cheques.

CHILLED BEEF—

WITHOUT PRESUMING to know any more than the ordinary person about such matters, we have for a long time believed that if Western Canadian beef was to be shipped to the United Kingdom in any large quantity it would have to be as chilled beef. Alive, there were too many risks, too much expense and too many hands for the animals to pass through. We knew of course that our chilled or frozen beef had to compete with the Argentine product produced under cheaper conditions and that the average Britisher frozen beef is not to be compared to the fresh home product.

However, a dispatch from Ottawa published yesterday states that Canadian chilled beef commanded a higher price than Scottish beef on the famous Smithfield market. This was due to new methods of refrigeration developed by Dr. A. M. Shaw of the Government's marketing service.

Entirely apart from information given in the dispatch, we can say that during 1937 and 1938 a new method of carcass dressing was developed. The new method reduced freezing time by a very large percentage and in addition enables the beef, when thawed out for cooking to have the qualities of fresh killed beef. Ordinarily when frozen beef thaws out there is a loss of liquid. In the new process this loss of liquid is prevented and the beef cuts up like fresh killed beef. Of course the new development in refrigeration is available to Argentina as well as to Canada and there is still the problem of cheap grass fed Argentine beef to contend with. But the new process will, if and when applied in Western Canada, allow an opportunity for our farmers to feed their surplus grain to young cattle which in time will compare favorably on the Smithfield, London, market with British raised beef.

TAKING NO CHANCES

A judge, failing of re-election, was made cashier of a local bank. A man presented a cheque to be cashed.

"Don't know you," greeted the new cashier.

The customer produced a credit card, a business card, and a lot of letters addressed to himself.

"Not sufficient identity," said the cashier, pushing the cheque back.

"Why, Judge," protested the man, "I've known you to hang a man on less evidence than that."

"That may be," said the judge, "but when you're paying out money you have to be careful."—Wall St. Journal.

C.N.R. Purchases Made Work for Canadian Firms

Thousands Of Men Given Work As Result Of Railway's Operations

Montreal, Jan. 16—Canadian materials and supplies to the value of approximately $51,000,000 were purchased during 1938 by the Canadian National Railways from 8,000 firms throughout the Dominion, according to a review of the activities of this department by W. Vaughan, vice-president in charge of purchases, stores and steamships, issued at headquarters of the National System this evening.

"The Canadian National Railways continues to be the largest buyer of Canadian materials" Mr. Vaughan stated. "This is emphasized by the fact that we have almost one third more mileage to maintain and operate in Canada, than that of any other railroad.

"Of that $51,600,000, $11,100,000 was expended for new equipment and $10,000,000 for fuel from Canadian mines. Purchases included 50,000 different items.

"As the direct result of expenditures, by the Canadian National Railways, tens of thousands of workmen were given employment during the year, in the railroad shops, in the mines, in the woods, steel mills, factories, foundries, car and locomotive shops, and wholesale and retail stores.

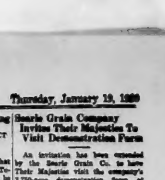
"The National System is the largest buyer of Canadian coal. One tenth of every five produced in Canada is purchased by our company. An interesting side light on employment resulting from railroad purchases, is that gallons, of creosote, tar, and similar products were used in the treatment of ties, which in some cases trebles their life. This material was also produced and purchased in Canada.

"During the year, the following equipment was ordered by the C.N.R.; 2,000 forty-ton box cars; 5 mail and express cars; six dining cars; 10 buffet sleeping cars; 14 snow plows; and 25 sand cars.

"Probably no single agency has done as much stabilize business in Canada, as the purchases made by the Canadian railroads, and I believe that as the people of Canada recognize that fact, they will realize the importance and necessity of fairly regulating all forms of transportation in the same way, as the railways are regulated.

"As the railroads in Canada are the largest employers of labor and the largest consumers of Canadian products, it is essential for the welfare of the country that they should receive fair treatment as compared with the other forms of transportation, otherwise many industries will be adversely affected and unemployment in those industries greatly increased because the railways must curtail their purchases so far as practicable in relation to their net revenue."

New Government Publicity Director



DAN E. C. CAMPBELL

Former editor of Terance News Finlason at Radio Station CFCN who has been appointed publicity director for the Province of Alberta. In announcing the appointment Hon. E. C. Manning, Acting Premier, also announced the appointment of Mackay and Baker Advertising Service as advertising agents for the Government of the Province of Alberta have been authorized and the work of reorganizing the Government's publicity activities along new lines is being commenced today.

In making these appointments, the Government has taken into consideration the fact that experienced press and publicity men should be employed in order to give newspapers, news agencies and radio stations the most possible assistance in obtaining accurate information concerning the Government's activities and plans.

In this connection the Government has good very carefully into the qualifications of those appointed to these responsible positions, and plans for the extension of the Government's publicity bureau have been approved.

Mr. Campbell has a background of valuable news experience, having been associated with news work for more than 18 years. Mr. Campbell was reporter and then city editor on the Calgary Herald, and subsequent to this was night editor on the Calgary Albertan. For the last four years he has been editor of Radio Station C.F.C.N.'s Terance News. In addition to editing these news casts a day, Mr. Campbell has delivered a weekly editorial and commentary on current events over this radio station.

Feeling that all phases of publicity should be covered in organizing a thorough publicity set-up, the Government has appointed the Mackay & Bavary Advertising Service of Calgary, as advertising counsel for the Government, with authority to supervise the preparation of the publicity bureau so that its work will most effectively dovetail with any advertising that the Government may contemplate in the future.

In making these appointments, the Government would like to make it clear to all news media and to the public generally that the new publicity bureau has been set up purely as an office for assisting in getting into the hands of the public accurate and authentic information. This bureau is not expected by the Government to function in the capacity of a propaganda bureau in the accepted sense of that word, and its main purpose will be to assist editors, reporters and news agency representatives in obtaining the actual facts in connection with any news stories developing as a result of the Government's activities or plans.

It is for this reason that an able, experienced news man has been put in charge of the bureau, and it is felt that under his direction the bureau will function in the best interests of the Province as a whole.

The Government sincerely hopes that Boards of Trade, Chambers of Commerce, Exhibition and Fair Boards, Industrial and co-operative organizations and every section of the general public will feel free to call upon this publicity bureau for information that may be used in better publicizing their activities and making their publicity work and that of the Government's bureau most effective through an active co-operation that will build up a public consciousness of the importance of our natural resources, industries and commercial enterprises.

Hog Marketing Will Be Higher

"The output of hogs during 1939 will show an appreciable increase over that of 1938," according to the Agricultural Situation and Outlook for 1939, issued by the Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa and the Commerce. This prospective increase is the result of the favourable ratio between hog prices and feed prices during the past several months. "With comparatively low feed prices likely to be maintained through the 1939-40 crop year, it is expected that hog numbers and hog marketings in 1939 will increase," state the report. It is anticipated that the increase will be most pronounced in western Canada where the sharpest reduction occurred in 1938, due to adverse feed supplies. The main increase is expected to be marketed in the latter half of 1939, although some increases in Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario will probably occur earlier in the year.

Hog prices are not expected to reflect fully the increased marketings because of the improved consumer demand in Canada and a possible increase in exports. "Prices, however, should be relatively more favourable from January to June than they will be the latter half of the year," according to the Outlook Report.

The Bacon Industry Act, 1938, in Great Britain, which became law in August, provides for the licensing and organization of the British hog and bacon industries, including the control of economic price levels to farmers and curers. The average price fixed by the Act is to be adjusted on a monthly basis with a view to ensuring a regular supply of hogs throughout the year. In addition, the regulation of imports is to be continued, with annual assent Canadian producers of a market protected from serious foreign competition.

Under the recently signed Canada-United States Trade Agreement, the British duty on hogs from United States was reduced from two cents to one cent per pound. This may result in a considerable increase in movement of certain types of hogs to the United States markets.

Further details of the hog situation as well as a review of all the principal agricultural products produced in Canada will be found in the Agricultural Situation and Outlook for 1939, which will be available free of charge about the end of January from the Publicity and Extension Di, vision, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Heavy Wheat Yields In England

Reports of a wide-spread drought in England last spring created an impression among some people that the wheat crop would be a failure. As it happened, the weather was ideal for wheat production, and the 1938 harvest was one of the best England ever experienced.

At the famous Rothamsted Experimental Farm in Hertfordshire, England, the best sections yielded 74 bushels of wheat to the acre, against the previous high record of 67.4 bushels in 1925. The field has been cropped with wheat ever since 1843, and so the 1938 crop was the ninety-fifth successive one on the same land.

COMMUNICATION

Dear Mr. Editor,

May I have space in your valuable paper to reply to Mr. Abernathy's communication of January 12th, 1939.

I welcome this opportunity of replying to Mr. Abernathy's criticism and also to give the ratepayers a little information in regard to policy of municipal council as of 46?.

New Mr. Editor, Mr. Abernathy said I admitted council used trust funds for road work, which is quite true, part of it was used for roads and part to finance other expenses of the municipality till taxes were collected in July, after the crops were cut took place. Previous to 1938, the Secretary and Reeve acted upon themselves to transfer funds from current account in general, but in 1938 it was done by resolution of council and carried.

If council required money to finance during the summer till taxes were collected in the fall, to the ratepayers way we would borrow from the bank and be charged interest at 7 per cent. In the same book we had trust funds which we could have drawing 1½ per cent interest. Now in all fairness, why give the bank the difference between 7 per cent and 1½ per cent interest? Now I wish to point out this bank has been done for the past eight years that I know of, and that is one more year than I have been on the council. All money was transferred from the trust fund has been used and the trust fund the same year in which it was transferred.

In 1934, council discussed question of Tofield Park. We had a delegation from the Lions Club Mr. Brown and Mr. Bomber Joe. Check me on this.

One cutter was sporting a bright colored shirt at the rink, and when would happen if the records were destroyed by fire, he told us it would be necessary to treat everybody as though they hadn't paid their taxes and if they couldn't produce a tax receipt, they would have to pay them a second time. The following is the cost of the roads:

Paid J. and J. Taylor for vault door $213.00.

Total cost $1,174.16.

It may be a point of law whether the trust funds can be included in the cost.

In regard to the raising of the mill rate in recent years. Previous to the depression, council set mill rates to raise eight to eleven mills. Of this amount it took four or four and one-half mills to meet requirements which were the same every year as they are now, so it requires eight or eight and one-half mills to meet all expenses, and not a dollar of that amount for roads. It requires more money to meet the various social services such as Doctors, Hospitalization and relief for indigents, Mothers' Allowance, old age pensions and old men in homes. This means a lot more work in the office and the Secretary-Treasurer's salary is no higher than it was then.

Yours truly,
W. GLENN.

—WHAT DID A.R.C.— BEHIND THE HOG

Our version of a Skip at a tough end:

His heart stopped—His voice dropped —His breath caught—His nerves were shot—His senses reeled—His legs were sealed—His eyes blazed— They also glazed—His ears strained —He was scatterbrained—He ground his teeth—and his cheeks dimpled— His lips burned—His head split—His palate charred—He was full of grit —He dropped his spoon—and buried his nose—He lost his ears, and his marrow froze—Till I wondered in spite of his fortunesilke frame, How he'd ever live to finish the game.

And speaking of poetry—I asked one cutter if he liked Kipling—and he said: "I dunno, how do you kippie?" One skip was panned for beating another—Ain't curling a knockout.

As one country curler said, "Where do we find managers?" That's easy, where women gose.

The Hammond rink arrived back from the City Spiel with brooms and rocks. Everyone knows heavy clouds of atmosphere, lower altitudes and what not, you prevent them from participating in the prizes.

And now we have another stout rink of men at the Vegreville Spiel, also last year's champions of the "Arts" Beirnes, Skip Doc Law, Glen Brush and Ken Newcombe. Our greetings win the same as the ladies rink did. Or in other word's they will last long. Yes, Skip Bob Ross and Bill Bomber Joe. Check me on this.

One curler was sporting a bright colored shirt at the rink, and when would happen if the records were destroyed by fire, he told us it would be necessary to treat everybody as though they hadn't paid their taxes and if they couldn't produce a tax receipt, they would have to pay them a second time. The following is the cost of the roads:

And don't cometh upon the ice with the dog days thereon. Thou canst not quicken the pace of a dying stone with a heat cause by the sun. Throw straws in the path of thine own skip, and also in the path of thine adversary. Then he would be handed in the cost.

In regard to the raising of the mill rate in recent years. Previous to the depression, council set mill rates to raise eight to eleven mills. Of this amount it took four or four and one-half mills to meet requirements which were the same every year as they are now, so it requires eight or eight and one-half mills to meet all expenses, and not a dollar of that amount for roads. It requires more money to meet the various social services such as Doctors, Hospitalization and relief for indigents, Mothers' Allowance, old age pensions and old men in homes. This means a lot more work in the office and the Secretary-Treasurer's salary is no higher than it was then.

This week's Brain wave: When in Rum, do as the Rummers do.

Liquor up, I mean Keep 'er up.

And the rink shall be filled with music, and the curse that infect the sky shall fold their tents like the Arabs, and as silently rest away.

United Church News

On Saturday evening under the auspices of the Y.P.U., Mr. Percy Page and his daughter, Miss Patricia, gave a delightful illustrated talk on the European trip of the Edmonton Grade. The Church was filled to capacity and the evening was most enjoyable as well as very instructive. Mr. J. W. Chapman introduced Mr. Percy Page in a few fitting remarks. Mr. McDonell assisted with a fine reading Mr. and Miss Page were entertained by the Young People after the lecture. On Sunday evening the Young People assisted the regular service. They took their place in the choir seat and Mr. Harold Schultz read the scripture lesson. Rev. D. R. Allan gave the history and story of four familiar hymns, which were used during the service. After the service Dr. Young, Lamont, spoke to the Young People.

It was one of the finest addresses ever delivered. It was packed with common sense—practical and scientific facts and all through his splendid address was a fine spiritual appeal. It was greatly enjoyed by the young folk. Refreshments were served at the close.

Mr. Bebaghton and Miss MacHaffey acceptably sang solos.

Alberta's Relief Problem

Approximately 71500 persons within Alberta received relief moneys totalling $1,700,000 during the fiscal year 1937-38. The 71,500 persons included families and single homeless unemployed who applied for and received relief. The gross cost included direct relief exclusive of agriculture and farm settlement projects. The cost of administering this work was $169,859.89 or only 2.55 per cent of the total.

In addition to relief included in these figures, certain work programs were undertaken and provided wages in lieu of relief. Under these programs, 2,185 families, representing 10,775 persons, earned an average of $66.00 per family. These families went off relief while they were work, ing but were given further assistance afterward if they needed it. These persons who would have been eligible for relief had it not been for the work programs, produced 32,300 railway ties for railway relief contracts, 2,400 telephone poles; 358,179 lineal feet of piling and guard rails, and 6,200,000 board feet of manufactured dimension lumber. The sale of this material did not interfere in any way with Alberta markets because the railway tie, wire for use in other parts of Canada and the telephone poles, piling and lumber provided, from local sources, materials which would have been imported had the work programs not been undertaken.

The relief cost basis for maintenance of transient families, which are a charge of the Provincial Government, could be cut virtually in half if these families could be placed on the land. A recent survey shows, that the Government has at its disposal approximately 5000 farm homes of which 3000 are now available and in good shape. There are 700 transient families on Provincial relief. Of these 358 are in Edmonton; 298 in Calgary and 314 elsewhere throughout the Province.

The Government is prepared to place these families in farm homes already established; to continue to pay rent and taxes for these homes; to supply each family with a cow, some pigs, poultry and other assistance when each family demonstrates that it is able to care for such stock and to continue, in short, the government's relief policy for transient families until each family has become self-supporting. We feel that many families, if they would take advantage of the farm settlement plan, could be self-supporting in two years but experience has proven that, if they remain in cities it is most difficult to become self-supporting and they remain a charge upon the taxpayers of Alberta. Since December 1, 1938, only 24 transient families have taken advantage of the Government's farm settlement offer. Three families are still on relief but have been located in districts where they will have opportunities to get seasonal employment on neighboring farms and where, through farming operations, they will get a new opportunity to become self-supporting.

Vocation training and instruction in the manufacture of furniture, basket, and other household fixtures was given to 160 families in Edmonton. The furniture made by these families will be used by other families under our rehabilitation plan. Other articles so made will be sold and all money received will be distributed among families responsible for their manufacture.

A total of about 2,000 single homeless men, many of whom are not a responsibility of the Alberta Government, were given work under a Dominion-Provincial program. Each government contributed 50 per cent of this cost but the work was found and administered by the Provincial Government. It operated from April 1st, to July 31st, 1937, at which time the Dominion agreement terminated. The average cost of the work was $65.00 per man per month. Each man was given a portion of his earnings during the term of his employment but a portion was retained by the government and was later made available to him in monthly installments payable at any point in western Canada.

Under the Dominion-Provincial Farm Placement Plan 4,415 single homeless men were placed on farms — the Dominion and Provincial Governments sharing the cost equally. The average cost to the Province for men in depots and recreation camps was approximately $15.00 per man per month. Under the Farm Placement Plan this cost including clothing and transportation, payment of $6.00 per month to the man and a bonus of $6.00 to the farmer was approximately the same as the cost of keeping a man in a depot but the Farm Placement Plan proved more advantageous in many ways and the Dominion Government shared half the cost — a share not for men depots.

In addition to these activities in behalf of persons on relief, the Provincial Government administered successfully the agreements, in which the Dominion Government contributed, for the removal of settlers

Outlook For Western Agriculture

"The Farm Outlook for Saskatchewan, 1939" has just been issued by Professor E. C. Hope and H. Van Vliet of the Farm Management Department, University of Saskatchewan. As conditions in Alberta are similar to those in Saskatchewan, a summary is given here with the prospects as outlined in the pamphlet.

The outlook for wheat prices is obscure. Average yields on a moderately reduced world acreage will probably result in wheat prices remaining at prairie low levels.

The rising building cycle will result in an increased demand for flaxseed during the next few years.

The price of crested wheat grass seed will probably average lower next fall, but increased alfalfa seed production is not likely to depress prices for that seed below the levels of 1938.

Increased hog supplies will bring lower prices in the second half of the year than for the same period of 1938.

Cattle prices will be relatively stronger during 1939 and will rise very sharply by 1940.

World wool supplies are larger than last year but increased demand will result in slightly higher prices for 1939

Prices for horses are expected to remain at about present levels or move a little higher for one or two years. After that a long decline in prices is expected.

Butter prices will average lower in 1939 due to large stocks and increased production.

Increases in poultry will result in lower prices for both eggs and poultry in the second half of the year.

Business activity in Canada and the United States will average higher in 1939 than in 1938; employment will be greater and the demand for many products will improve in both markets. Business is also expected to be better in Great Britain and there should be some increase in total world trade this year compared with 1938.

Taking into account all known factors and assuming that grain crops in 1939 will not be less than in 1938 the total farm income in 1939 should be higher than in 1938. — Wheat Pool Bulletin.

from the drought areas. A total of 223 families consisting of 938 persons were settled on fertile land under this plan. Of these families 163 had received previous relief assistance. A few of these families are still being given some assistance but the majority are no longer a charge upon the taxpayers.

Approximately 2,000 patients were given medical services and hospitalization. For this purpose the Provincial Government retained the services of 20 physicians and three nurses who were available to the needy persons in the pioneer and outlying districts where they practiced. Medical care for single men on relief were granted on the recommendation of our approved physicians.

"All Flesh is Grass"

PROFESSOR T. W. JACKSON IN THE CANADIAN THRESHER

The buffalo is the embodiment of the grass of the plains in action, and when the plains turned to grain the buffalo had to go. Fences and cultivators were limitations on free-roving life. The kit fox disappeared from the plains and the whooping crane; the prairie chicken retreated into the rack country; and the lynx north of them. A great change had taken place and the animals soon adjusted themselves to the new conditions.

Those favored by settlement moved in the wheat and the weasel followed the granary and the rat traversed the cultivated area. Coyotes moved northward and has now reached the Peace River country. The Nebraska cottontail has pushed latitude fifty-two during the last ten years; and grey squirrels have come into the Red River Valley during the last seven years. A rapid adjustment is taking place, for the coyote changes his habits from the locals as with humans—a steady spread and then limitation to the food supply on the pioneer fringe. The rabbits are fewer moving away from their accustomed grass areas. The change in water level during the four dry years—1932 to 1936—greatly reduced the muskrat and the wild duck is dependent upon the marsh.

The major fluctuations and alterations are the most certain law of wild life. No country has ever eaten, give records of periodic fluctuations of fur-bearing animals than Canada. For over a century the Hudson's Bay Company had a virtual monopoly of the trade, and their complete records are available. These show quite regular eleven-year cycles for varying hare and ground-squirrel, fox and lynx since 1825, with peak years, '34, '45, '56, '67, '78, '89, '98, '09, '20, '31 coinciding with cusspot maxima. So one would expect with a strictly herbivorous animal, such as the varying hare, varying in color with the seasons and varying in numbers with the vegetation which varies with unspot cycles—the hot maxima 1937-38 the next 1938-39, evidences of which is already being appreciated, with a four-year maxima of drouth, which seriously affected all animal life. Four lean years, now four fat years, then three between.

So it was in the beginning, as it shall be . . . without end. The Pharaohs knew it as seven fat years and seven lean years—the magic number. Today it is eleven years (10.5 by the sunspots). Both the increase and the decrease are rather sudden: the former due to geometric multiplication under favorable conditions; the latter due to epidemic complications under unfavorable conditions.

The key animal is the carnivorous animal upon the herbivorous rabbit and hare—that is the fluctuations are parallel. We might well say: "All fur is rabbit, and rabbit is grass." And since grass is ramonia, and ramonia is cellulose, we may always expect periodic fluctuations.

This ordertiness and regularity should be part of our economic structure, having learned from our boom and hopes and needless despairs. Our annual carryover of seed and storage, our dealings in futures and hedgings, our acreage in wheat and fallow, in livestock and meadow, our outlay in implements and insurance, should all be in relation to the well established periodic fluctuation of weather, crops and prosperity of man and beast.

Bigger & Better Breakfasts

AND SEE THE FAMILY COOK'S SMILE

Cold days call for a hearty breakfast, something to stick to your ribs and give you lots of energy to start out into the crisp, snowy weather. Some creamed finnan haddie, nice little sardine fillets on toast, with scrambled eggs on the side, and serve with plenty of coffee. Or how about some pancakes for breakfasts to get you faster for, and to give a lift to the day!

Canadian Salmon Pancakes

1 1-pound can Canadian salmon
Salt and pepper
2 cups mashed potatoes
¼ teaspoon dry mustard

Flake the salmon, crush the bones, remove the skin, but add the oil (which contains essential vitamins) to the mashed potatoes. Season with salt, pepper and mustard. Form into flat pancakes and pan-fry in hot, deep fat. Serve in a stack with butter or a thick soup for a sauce.

Creamed finnan haddie needs no introduction, but serve it on toast, with grated cheese sprinkled on top and run under the broiler. For a staggered breakfast when various members of the family come down a few minutes apart, your finnan haddie in a baking dish and keep it hot in the oven and serve on toast, piping hot.

Those who are a family favourite, but put some little herring fillets on toast and serve two on each plate. It adds a dash of interest to the simplest breakfast. Very nice, too, with scrambled eggs. Or, as a change from the usual kinds of bread, try cheese toast. Cut the bread in slices, toast them gently on the toast, and serve with the scrambled eggs.

Canadian fish adds to the spice of imagination to breakfast. You'll be surprised what good breakfasts a good breakfast puts the family in for the day!

Says Canada Beef U.K. "Sensation"

OTTAWA, Jan. 19. — Canadian prime beef chilled in transit has become the sensation of London's famed Smithfields market, where it commands a higher price than Scottish beef from Aberdeen Marshall (Lib. Peel) said in the senate Tuesday.

Senator Marshall said the new method of shipment had been developed by Dr. A. M. Shaw of the dominion agriculture department's marketing service. Hung up in chilled railroad cars, the sides of beef were acclimated at the same temperature crossing the Atlantic and during transfer to the market.

"Beef killed in the city of Toronto —and within a few week this will also be true of cattle killed in Winnipeg and a few weeks later of cattle killed in Edmonton and Calgary—is shipped to the Smithfield market in London, where it commands a higher price than prime Scotch," the senator said.

New Cars For West

Winnipeg, January 23— Largest passenger cars ever built for the Canadian National system, one of ten new diesel-engine cars to be placed over western lines will shortly go into service between Winnipeg and Edmonton via Saskatoon and Regina and between Calgary and Winnipeg via Regina.

Boasting numerous new features, the new cars are virtual hotels on wheels. In addition to the dining section, the cars have elaborate smoking saloon for men and women, roomy sleeping compartments and sections, and kitchen which is probably the most modern of any rail car in operation today.

Overall length is more than 80 feet, and an outstanding feature is the absence of "vestibules" between cars, mounted on the roof and delivering air throughout the train through a centre duct. The Burgess radio-vent ceiling, consisting of a series of fine, perforated tubes which distributes the air with an entire absence of draughts, is the result of months of research and experimentation.

Cure Of The Young Horse's Foot

(Experimental Farms News)

"No foot; no horse" is a well known adage amongst horsemen. This statement, W. H. Ricks, Superintendent, Dominion Experimental Farm, Agassiz, B.C., is particularly important and true of stallions, as they are the progenitors of the best horse crop. Inferior feet in horses will be passed on to the next generation just as promptly as any other structural defect. We can assist heredity, however, by taking proper care of the feet of our horses. It is never too soon to start caring for the young horse's feet. Not only can the feet "acquire appearance by pounding; by hot early, patient, kind handling of foals, will save much perspiration and many backaches later on.

The proper care of horses' feet should keep the foot short in front, wide at the heel and above all clear of the bottom. This makes a round level foot that takes a good grip of the ground and keeps the concerns well lined up and at the proper angle.

It is wonderful what can be done in improving action, and in putting bend to shakes and in the out, by proper trimming of the feet. Don't sprinkle the cheese on top. Then keep it hot in the oven and serve on toast, piping hot.

HOCKEY

RYLEY 5—TOFIELD 1

An exciting game of hockey was held at the Tofield rink on Thursday last when the seniors took the small end of a 2-1 score. On the night's play Ryley were worth their win, but certainly the locals were playing with the breaks against them. Time and time again the locals would get through and were unable to convert rushes into goals.

A feature of the game was the number of Ryley supporting in attendance. Another feature was the long argument over a goal scored by MacIntyre. There were two officials, Stan Barke, Judge of play and Bob Evans, referee. Quite close to the end of the second period, Les Glover came down on a rush and shot the puck through the defence and in trying to follow it in was stopped by the defence and there was a tangle of players. Stan Barke rang his bell for a trip and a second later MacIntyre, who had skated in to pick up the puck, shot and scored. There was an immediate cry that the bell had rang first and that it was no goal. Referee Evans skated over to Judge of Play Barke and told him something and immediately awarded Tofield the goal. Ryley fans and players were convinced something was being put over on them and refused to continue to play until the goal was disallowed. Finally Tofield gave in and play was resumed. Later information disclosed the bell rang for a trip, due to the tangle of Glover and the defence and therefore Tofield was entitled to the goal. Had the bell rang for an offside, Tofield would not have been entitled to the goal. But then what is one goal more or less between friends.

Goals: Ryley — Hammond from Grey; Hammond.

Tofield—Everitt.

Line-up: Tofield —Dodds, L. Glover, N. Glover, Everitt, Worten, J. Bowie Barnes, MacInnes Stass, Shaffer.

Ryley: McLennan, Findlay, Teare, Bendixson, Chapple, Vergette, Helfy, Grive, Hammond, Rohene.

Referee—Bob Evans.

Judge of Play—Stan Burke.

HASTINGS LAKE 6 — TOFIELD HIGH SCHOOL 2

All decked out in bright red uniforms, Hastings Lake Area invaded Tofield and met the High School Hockey team in an encounter on Sunday. And after three periods of fast hockey, came out on the winning end of a 6-2 score. They went worth their win, having a stronger and more vigorous front line than the High School team. The School defence though stood up well under repeated rushes. It was a nice clean game and interesting to watch.

Line-up: Tofield—Worten, Worten, McAllister, Swift, C. Worten, L. Worten, L. Stauffer, M. Longhaus, John Moore.

Hastings Lake: Bailey, Dunn, Baumgartner, Bates, Tough, Rowland, Anderson, Campion, Rowland, Drues.

Interim Plan Explained

On Friday last a fair number attended the Variety Theatre to hear Mr. McLachlan, Dr. McPherson and Mr. Cleah explain the new interim plan now being put into effect by the Provincial Government. All speakers gave detailed accounts of the plan and urged those present to support it to the best of their ability.

Mr. McCauley has been placed in charge of the Tofield sub-agency and those desiring to open an account or do other business through the treasury branches may obtain full information from him.

The meeting would has been more largely attended but the night was 20° and stormy.

Reports from the Tofield sub-agency are that a few accounts are being opened up and as working of the plan becomes more widely known, the number will be increased.

A dance was held last Friday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Cowden last Friday night. All the members got many visitors were present. The February meeting will be at the home of Mrs. E. A. Moon.

Mrs. C. Erickson left last Sunday for Calgary to attend the U.F.A. convention. She is a delegate for the U.F.W.A.

Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Moon, Mr. A. Patterson, G. Gardner and Mrs. P. O. Hanson motored to Kingman on Saturday of last week where Mr. E. A. Moon conducted the Wheat Pool meeting. Mrs. Moon and Mrs. Flaatten visited at the T. Hertlief home.

Mrs. Anna Hetzer, one of the old-time pioneer Dodds, passed away last Thursday. The funeral took place on Wednesday in Ryley.

Mr. H. Gardner from Viking, who was visiting around here for a few days left last Wednesday for his home. Mrs. Gardner remained with her sister for some time yet.

In our last correspondence, it should have read Palmer Annebo instead of Anderson.

Mr. and Mrs. N. Sand and Ellen from Edmonton visited at the Berg and Fasten homes on Sunday of last week.

Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Berg were visitors to the B. Helgeland home on Thursday of last week.

—ROSS CREEK 3—TOFIELD 10—

On Sunday the seniors played a game at Ross Creek winning by a 10-3 score. We have no particulars concerning the game except the score.

RYLEY 6—TOFIELD 9

At Ryley last night (Wednesday), the senior team and Ryley clashed in a league fixture. After three clinching periods of hockey in which scoring was the rule rather than the exception, Tofield won by a 9-6 score.

What! Those Boys Again!

Your school district is like ours, you say.

Your school house much too small.

With attendance increased in such a way.

You are at loss to place them all.

The grades are there from one to nine.

From little tots on up to the ten.

The school that once we thought was fine

Has turned out to be a flop.

We admit it should be twice the size,

So that of newcomers we could take care,

But that is where the trouble lies.

The funds will come, from where?

All space is taken, no desks to spare,

The teacher has all he can do.

There should be another, the duties to share,

If only we could afford to have two.

Now there are in our district a noble class,

If folks would only give them their due,

If there were more of these, this trouble they'd ban,

Because you'll have to admit it's true.

To whom I refer are the hockey boys,

These fine lads who play the game,

If there were more like these, we'd have no noise,

But our pool rems would not be the same.

To encourage these lads go out of your way,

Welcome them wherever you be,

And the way they are, we think they'll stay,

Just encourage them along, you see.

To those boys the district owes a debt,

If only more would follow the example set,

There would be no school problem, that you can bet,

—As. Ace.

ROSS CREEK

Mr. A. Thor has left on an extended visit to his parents at Nelson, B.C.

On Saturday afternoon the Chipman Pee Wee's clashed with the Ross Creek Midgets at the local rink. After overtime session the game ended in a 4-4 tie.

Miss. J. C. Stenlyn met with a painful and unusual accident one day last week. While hooking a rug at the school her hook became stuck in the material and while trying to remove it, it came out suddenly and became lodged in her upper lip. She had to be taken to the Lamont hospital where it was cut out. She was unable at touch the remainder of the week, but we are glad to hear she is able to be back again now.

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Snidre and family and Miss J. C. Stenlyn were Sunday evening guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wilmes.

A large number of young people attended the house party held at the A. Ford home on Friday evening. Dancing was enjoyed throughout the evening. Music was supplied by Mr. C. Parkinson and Mr. P. Sognnaes.

A large crowd turned out Sunday p.m. to witness the hockey game staged between Tofield and Ross Creek. The locals again went down in defeat, the final score 10-5 for the visitors.

Mr. Ed Thor of Edmonton is visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Ford.

Quite a number from Ross Creek took in the dance at Paulns School Friday night. They all report a good time.

A hockey game was played on the Dodds ice between Dodds and Bardo last Saturday. The score was 8-7 in favor of Dodds.

A Whist Drive will be held on Friday evening at the School in aid of the Building Fund for the Community Hall. It is to be hoped that a good attendance will be in evidence and that the weather will be favorable. The Tofield friends please take notice and try to attend, as a dance in this hall will be very convenient for you for another "Port of Call," to roll out and help out. Thank you.

A Social Credit meeting was held at the School house on Monday night. Mr. R. Murray being the speaker. His subject being his observations whilst attending the recent conference. The attendance was fairly good.

The Annual Meeting of the ratepayers of the Lindbrook S.D. was held in the School here 4:30 p.m. Tuesday evening. The attendance was very meagre, most people seem to think that now the S.D. is incorporated in the Holden District that they have very little say in school affairs now, hence the non attendance.

COMMUNICATION

Dear Editor,

Please allow me space to reply to Reeve Glen's article in the Mercury of January 19th, 1939.

Your frank admission of protracted disregard of the M.D. Act by yourself and the secretary-treasurer, is quite refreshing, but is not a great surprise to many.

With regard to the school money, if I understand the question, the Municipality is required to collect all moneys necessary to carry on the schools but are not required to create an immediate reserve nor to use that reserve as the secretary and the Board see fit. While you may attempt to justify your action in using that trust fund; I do not think that you can justify yourself to the people else in creating a $14,000 trust fund.

I would like to call your attention to a school district that had used the money that they had requisitioned and when they required it, namely, although their district had money in the trust fund, they were required to borrow and pay interest.

With regard to the vault, can the reeve give any good reason why the operation of building it should not have been submitted to the ratepayers as the M.D. Act calls for. There is a discrepancy in the figures that you give regarding the cost and the figures given by the auditors report; but why mention both such a discrepancy. If anyone will read Section 18 (6) of the M.D. Act, I don't think that there will be any doubt but that they will decide that the cost of fixtures in the vault were expenditures.

The ratepayers are always glad to receive any information that they are regarding Municipal affairs, but we feel that there is still lots of information due us.

WILL ASERNETHY.

—WHAT DID A.B.C.— BEHIND THE HOG

The Highlight this week was the Young Peoples' little Spiel on Saturday. We spent a very pleasant hour and-a-half with the gang at Nat Hakkana, or McLaughline in the making, there were a flock of curlers and any number of others who curl. But who are we to offer any criticism on this. And out of all the tumult emerged the winners, Marj Stewart skipping her rink to the finals. She had "Wee Willie" Chapman, lead, Allen Allan, 2nd, Mrs. Jack Rimmett 3rd. As opposition, if we might call it that, we present "Tiny" Scottie McLaren in quite of his former self. Bonnett, Bowling Tartans and fingerless gloves, finished up on the very end of the scale. Mary Reed the Gallery and demonstrated the ins and outs before giving her rink the turns. It was a large day for the learned profession, as with Larry was Justin McCrea (I really was a good game) Pat Sears and Zelda Dodds. Larry was all set before each game, he bumped the 8 stones to the place of business, dusted them off, cleaned the ice, and there, as well as himself, were only provided with the necessary aids to curling. Chairman attended to this little duty for Miss Stewart, the fight was on. Jokes, repartee, wicks, shouts and the lopings filled the air, as steadily the game progressed. Larry was all for pushovers, and slowly and inevitably, he piled up the score. The game finished and the "MacWhachels, Brabbles, McLarys and Stewarts had been defeated, covered a new pair of shoulders. Larry took inches off as "Corporation" and some are definitely impressed, and our version of the above:

From the sublime to the nonsense. As we said last week, we had no luck at the Vegreville Spiel—At most every time for Artie, we were back back in 1931 and quote from the Edmonton Journal of February 25th. "The McLaughlin rink and good luck at the Edmonton Spiel, Mac with Art Hall, Ben Calvert and A. B. Chatterham, took the Eatons, Calgary Brewery, Bid in Bank of Montreal and the Grand Junction, Alberta by 19 out of 21 games. Are we slipping or is the curling getting better?

A poem to the Ladies:
I wonder why we curl ourselves,
Devoid of all diguise,
For mirror camouflage, I fear,
Weird sights would greet our eyes.
Without some tight restraining things.

Would most forms look so sweet,
How about those fatures which can make

An ugly face look sweet,
And lacking artificial aids,
Our cheeks would show few roses,
There'd be less sparkle in our eyes,
And more shine on our noses.
We swear we shun deception—
And at thoughts of human world faint,
But, tell the truth, don't you prefer,
To look like what we ain't.

Secretary-Treasurer's Report, 1938

PERSONELL OF COUNCIL—Mayor Swift, Councillors Brass, Lovell, Bellamy, Coutts, Taylor, Hammond and Law. Councillors Brass and Lovell retire in February 1939, as does Mayor Swift. In future the reeve and 6 of offices for councillors will be for three years, while that of Mayor remains at two years. This was effected by amendments to the Town & Village Act, made at the 1938 session of the Legislature.

AUDITORS— McCannel Bros. & Co., Chartered Accountants of Edmonton. Books and Records were audited for the year 1938 in accordance with the requirements of the Department of Municipal affairs. A statement of the receipts and expenditures together with the balance sheet were published in the issue of the Tofield Mercury dated January 19th, 1939.

INSPECTIONS— Mr. H.T. Curran of the Department of Municipal affairs and other records on the 2nd day of September 1938. The report advises that "All records are being well and neatly kept."

ASSESSMENTS— The assessment of lands, buildings, and businesses were along the same lines and in similar amounts to those of its previous year.

TAX RATES— The tax rate levied was 50 mills for municipal and school purposes; while a levy of 2½ mills was levied for the Government Social Aid.

COLLECTIONS— Total taxes collected during the year were slightly over the fifteen thousand dollars. Arrears were a little higher than in the previous year.

ARREARS OF TAXES— While the total taxes levied for 1938 is a little higher than in the previous year, the arrears are substantially reduced, and it is estimated that approximately $11,800.—00 are collectible. This latter amount is owing on tax-forfeited properties of valuable acreage, and includes what the town may reasonably expect to realise out of the sale of various parcels of acreage to which it has secured title.

RESERVE FUND— This will consist of $5,000 debenture borrowed by a par value of $5,000.00.

POLICE— The council has follow ed the procedure adopted in 1937 of employing a town policeman for eight duty during the winter months. The Curfew law is enforced during this period and children under sixteen years of age are required to be off the streets by 9 p.m. At least out of last a resolution was discovered by the police and extinguished before much damage was done.

DEBENTURES— Not much bonding was been made in effecting an adjustment of the debenture debt. One bondholder, the largest, is generously holding some of its. In the meantime the council is placing the sum of $4,000.00 in a reserve account to take care of this matter if such a time as an adjustment is made. At the present time there is $12,000. to the account. In the meantime no debenture coupons are being redeemed.

SCHOOL— during the year the school board found it necessary to request extra funds from the town with which to replace the school roof which was damaged in a severe windstorm. This item cost a little over (Continued on back page) only trouble we have with it is when we try to spell it.

"Daphne Deane," "Mystery Flowers," "Sunrise" "April Gold," "The Substitute Guest," "The Strange Proposal."

Marjorie Wetherill had always known that she was an adopted child. Her foster-parents had made no secret of it, but when they died it was only natural that Marjorie should seek out her own people . . . .

Mrs. Wetherill, whom Marjorie had loved deeply, had left the girl comfortably provided for, but as the Christmas season drew near, Marjorie was consumed with the desire to go to the family she could call her own . . . . .

Evan Brower, a handsome young neighbor whose family had been friends of the Wetherills for years, and who was now urging his love upon the lovely girl, advised Marjorie against it . . . . .

But there was a need within her which drew her on—What Marjorie found in the shabby little house on the outskirts of the city wrung her heart with a misery beyond belief. How she was able to restore her own people to Brentwood—dear old "BRENTWOOD," the home and life to which they belonged, and how her own life was adjusted by a love more wonderful than anything she had ever known, grows into a vivid and memorable story under the inspired pen of Mrs. Hill.

BRENTWOOD

FIRST INSTALLMENT

Marjorie Wetherill had always known she was an adopted child. She had been told when she was so young that it meant nothing at all to her. And as the years went by and she was surrounded by love and luxury, she thought little of it.

Once when she was in high school she had asked about her own people casually, more out of curiosity than because of any felt need of them, and she had been told that they were respectful people who had been unfortunate and couldn't afford to bring her up as they would like to have her brought up. It had all been very vague. But Marjorie was happy, and her foster mother gradually aroused the fact that while Marjorie had not been born her own, she had been chosen because they loved her at first sight, and that meant more even than if she had been born theirs.

Mrs. Wetherill was a devoted parent, and she and Marjorie were dear companions.

When Mr. Wetherill died Marjorie was still in her school life, and she and the mother were brought even closer together, so that when Mrs. Wetherill was suddenly stricken with an illness that they both knew would be swift and fatal, the girl spent the last months of her foster mother's life in utmost devotion to her. When it was over and she was alone, she felt utterly desolate and life seemed barren indeed.

There were many friends of course, for the Wetherill's had a large pleasant social circle, and there were constant invitations for prolonged visits here and there, but Marjorie had no heart to go. She longed for somehow of her own. The world seemed empty and uninteresting.

Then one morning about ten days before Christmas, because she could not settle to anything else, and because she had almost been dreading to go over her beloved foster mother's intimate papers, she went bravely to Mrs Wetherill's desk in the living room, unlocked it, and began to look over the papers in the pigeon-hole, and burning in the fireplace such things that had to be destroyed, at once finally to a little secret drawer, and there she found among several other important papers, a thick letter for herself.

"Dearest Marjorie :" it read,

I have never told you much about your own people. I did not really know much myself to tell, until about two years ago. My husband arranged everything about the adoption.

I never told you that you were one of twins.

You were a very beautiful baby, and so was your twin sister, yet she had a fruitier look than you, and we found upon questioning that she had little chance to live unless she could have an operation and special treatment, which your parents were unable to give her.

But though neither of you were candidates for adoption, yet I had not my heart upon you. After seeing you, I felt I must have you, and persuaded you so. For your husband could resist it to see what he could do. He discovered that your father was not strong and needed to get away to the country where he could have light work and be out of doors. My husband finally put it up to your mother while she was still in the hospital, that she should give her consent to our adopting you. Mr. Wetherill agreeing to finance the treatment of both your father and little sister.

Once, when you were about three months old, your mother wrote me, begging that she might come and see you, but I persuaded her that it would be better for us all if she did not.

But then, about a year ago, just as you were graduating from Miss Fine's School, your mother came to see me.

I really felt very sorry for her, she looked so much like you that I began to feel like a criminal. She wanted to see you. But I would not let her. I felt it would be a catastrophe for you at your time of life. Your big photograph taken in your graduating dress was on the desk and I showed it to her, and finally gave it to her.

She went away sobbing and I have never forgotten it.

And now that I am about to die I feel that I should leave behind me this information so that you may do what you wish in the matter. Perhaps you will want to do something for your own mother. You will have quite a fortune, my dear, and you are free to do with it as you wish in this matter.

So I am giving you your mother's name and address, to whatever your heart dictates.

Your loving Mother,

May D. Wetherill."

Below was an address in an eastern city.

Mrs. John Gray, 1465 Astry Street.

And below that, in pencil, had been written uncertainly as if with an idea of erasing it:

"To save he by which they called you was Dorothy."

She bowed her head on the letter and wept. First for the only mother she had known, and then for the mother she had not known. How it pitiful it all seemed! So many little babies without homes, and yet she had been loved so intensely by two mothers!

Then suddenly a thrill came to her heart. But they were not her own, whatever they were! How wonderful that would be. And her mother had wanted her, enough to come a long distance to see her!

That night she could not sleep and lay staring at the darkness of her room—the room that Mrs. Wetherill had made so beautiful for her—realizing how safe and sweet and quiet it was here, and how many com plications there might be if she broke the long silence between herself and her own family. Yet the longing in her heart increased, to see them, even to find out the worst possible about them, just to have them for her own. Not to be alone in the great world.

There was a sister, too, and how wonderful it would be to have a sister! She had always wished for a sister. Or—perhaps the sister had not lived at all!

The morning mail brought two invitations to spend Christmas week with friends.

Christmas was only ten days off and it loomed large and gloomy. The thought of a home for Christmas, and only mother she had known seemed intolerable.

But when she reasoned that perhaps forgetting was the best for the present, and that it was her duty which invitation she should accept, she realized that the Wetherills liked going to either place.

She was still in her unsettled state of mind when evening came, and Evan Browne arrived to call upon her.

The Brownes were old friends of the Wetherills, and among the closest friends of the Wetherills. Evan Browne was three or four years older than Marjorie, and though she had known him almost always, he had not been till the last year that he had paid her much attention.

"You are looking tired and white!" he said scrutinizing her face sharply, "You need a change, and I've come to offer one. Mother wants you to come over and stay a couple of weeks with her. She thinks you might like to help her get ready for the family gathering at Christmas time. It will take your mind off your loneliness."

Marjorie's heart sank. Here was the question again! And a family gathering! The hardest kind of a thing to go into! And the thought of his own unknown family in the back of her mind!

"Oh, that is dear of your mother, Evan!" she said. "I do appreciate it a lot, but I'm sure I don't feel I could."

He settled down comfortably to combat her, just as if he had expected to have to do so.

"You're very kind!" said Marjorie with troubled grace, but more and more certain that she wasn't going to accept. Then suddenly she lifted frank eyes to his.

"You see, Evan, there's something I have to do first before I can go anywhere and begin life."

"Something you have to do? What do you mean?" he asked puzzled, dominating eyes upon her.

"You know I'm an adopted child, Evan?" she said, her voice low and tremulous.

"Why, yes, I suppose, but what has that got to do with it?"

They were sitting on the deep couch, Marjorie at one end, Evan near the other, but now he leaned across it with a comforting manner and took into her eyes.

"It's my family. My own family, I mean. They are my own people, Evan!"

"Nonsense! Nothing of the kind!" said Evan lifting his well-modeled chin haughtily. "You are my own connected with them than I am. They gave you up! I should think you would never want to see or hear of them!"

Something in the harshness of his tone made Marjorie give a little shiver and draw her hand quietly away from under his.

"I don't feel that way, Evan!" she said gently, marveling that after her hours of doubt she suddenly felt clear in her mind about the matter. "You don't know all about it, or you wouldn't say that either, I'm quite sure. Mother left a letter telling me about my people and suggesting that I might want to hunt them up and see if there was anything I could do for them."

"And I still say, 'Let sleeping dogs lie!'" said Evan coldly. And then he laid his hand once more upon hers in a possessive way as if he owned her.

"They never cared anything for you or they wouldn't have sold you in the first place. And now you are a being of another world than theirs and they have no right to intrude into your life and try to get your property away from you! I insist—!"

Marjorie drew her hand decidedly out from under his again and sprang up, her own chin lifting defiantly, her eyes bright and indignant.

"Evan! You must not talk that way! You simply don't understand at all."

"But, darling, be reasonable!" said Evan softening his tone. Marjorie felt's own notice he had called her darling. It was such a common phrase of the day, and Evan was a very close friend. But his voice was less aggressive now, more gentle. He got up and stood beside her, taking her hands in his and drawing her nearer to him. "Listen, little girl! If you are really serious about this thing, of course it will have to be investigated. I still think it would be better not, but if you have set your conscience on it, I'll be glad to do the investigating for you. I am sure I can look after your interests, and I will do what you wish me to, more promptly. I am sure you can trust me, Marjorie, I love you, don't you know it, little girl?"

She looked at him startled. It was the first time he had ever called her that. He had just been a good friend, somewhat as she supposed a brother might be, but not in the sense of lovers or brothers.

She drew back and tried gently to take her hands away from his clasp, but he held them firmly and drew her nearer.

"Dear little girl!" he said suddenly, bending his head and pressing his cheek against hers, seeking her lips for his own and pressing a kiss on them.

For an instant she yielded herself to the strength of his arms, for it was but only an instant so brief it might have been a mere caress between a man so yielding. For suddenly she sprang away, and put out her hands fiercely.

"No, please, no! now! I can't think of such things now!"

He snatched at her hands again trying to draw her back quietly to his embrace.

"Poor child!" he said stooping and kissing her fingers gently. "Don't you realize that this is where you belong in my arms? Don't you love me?"

"I don't know!" said Marjorie turning unhappy eyes away from him. "I don't even thought of you in this way. And my heart is full of so many other things!"

And he suddenly drew her close again and pressed hot kisses on her lips.

But now she sprang away again, pushing him away with her hands.

"No! No!" she cried out. "I will not let you kiss me until I am sure, and I am not sure! Please won't you go away and let me think? My mind is so tired and confused just now!"

"Poor child!" he said gently. "I am sorry if I have seemed to hurry you, but I thought you knew that this is my own natural protector. But I am willing to wait, to go slow, till your sorrow is not so sharp. I only ask one thing of you and that is that you will not think over your future a matter of your family till you have talked with me again. Then you may think over, and if anything has to be done you will let me handle it for you. Will you promise?"

Marjorie was still for several seconds, her head bowed and her hands tightly before her, then she said slowly, reluctantly:

"I will promise to think over what you said. Everything that you have said."

NEED 2,800-MILE TRAIN TO CARRY CANADIAN COAL

If all the coal produced in Canada in one year were loaded into freight cars, the resulting train would reach all the way from Montreal to Vancouver, a distance of nearly 2,800 miles, according to a statement of the Canadian National Railways. Writing on mineral wealth in the Canadian National Magazine, its points out that the structural materials — cement, lime, sand and gravel, stone — in last year's mining product, would fill the same strings of cars reaching from Montreal to Vancouver, and a train carrying the output of metallics — asbestos, gypsum, quartz, salt, sulphur — would reach from Montreal to Halifax.

If Canada's 1937 copper production were to be shown as a train, the freight bulgit of a railway freight car the block would be nearly three miles long. A similar block of lead would be nearly two miles long and one of the zinc production would be nearly two and a half miles long. The year's silver production would form a slab a foot thick, 10 feet wide and nearly 240 feet long. The year's gold would make a block a foot thick, 10 feet wide and almost 56 feet long.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By W. L. Strange, Director "The Crop Testing Plan."

A good deal of discussion is taking place about the possibility of industrial uses for wheat as a means of using up some of the surplus, but not unwanted, wheat surplus that for the moment exists in the world.

It has been suggested that agriculture needs the assistance of industrial scientists. From this some have jumped to the conclusion that agriculture has not been served with scientists to the same extent as industry.

Quite the opposite of this fact is true. Scientific methods appeared in agriculture for thousands of years before industry itself was practised. The inventions by scientific agriculturists throughout the years, and up to this date, have, in my humble opinion, been the main basis for the wealth and welfare of the world than the inventions of scientists in industry. Consider for instance the invention of agriculture itself; the discovery that the kernels of a certain grass—lately called wheat—would make a bread that would support life; that the kernels could be sorted and would multiply manyfold; that the tribe could then settle in one place, and that one half of the people only then were needed to grow sufficient food for all the population.

There is a basic invention which, considering the benefits it has brought to mankind, surpasses, I believe, anything that industry can show.

Following factors have tended to raise price:— Far East takes Australian wheat cargoes; Weather again in Argentina, Corn condition officially reported below normal; Feeding of wheat and oats in France; China buys U.S. Pacific wheat; Disturbed European political situation; India crops widespread rains within ten days.

Following factors have tended to lower price:— Italy remains a poor buyer; government bent on reducing imports; Argentina has nearly 200 million bushels of wheat for export; favorable financial conditions in Germany; Two million bushel increase in Dominion wheat estimate; European buying power below normal; Britain buys Argentine wheat to replenish reserve stocks.

MUNICIPAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT—

IT IS POSSIBLE to become eloquent over issues involving war or peace. It is possible to use fine language in the cause of justice against oppression and injustice. But it is one whole of a job to work up any enthusiasm when starting to write regarding a financial statement compiled from books which were, as the government man put it, "well and neatly kept." We often wondered why financial men boasted of a "poker face," but perhaps it is not a poker face at all, but just a permanent puzzled expression. However, a glance over the auditor's financial statement of Municipal District of Cornhill, shows that generally speaking, the district is in good shape. By this we mean that the assets of the municipality are greater than the liabilities. The assets, of course, include cash in bank and on hand, office building, office equipment, road machinery, and what not. There is no mention of $42,117.80 uncollected municipal taxes. Of this last amount $24,000.00 has been classed as a "reserve" against non-collection. This word "reserve" is not quite as explicit as it might be. There really is no reserve. What is meant is that of the $42,117.80 uncollected municipal taxes, it is recognized that approximately $24,000.00 will not be paid. Neither can this amount be automatically cancelled. So to prevent the assets from becoming unduly swollen, $24,000.00 is listed as a liability against same. With the coming of settlement of taxes." It is quite alright, but it set us looking for $24,000.00 in money which was not there. It could be noted in passing that of this $24,000.00 "reserve," only a small portion of it is on farm land, most of it is on sub-divisions. This simply means that taxes have been allowed to pile up on village lots that will never be paid.

Total municipal receipts were slightly higher than last year, but total municipal taxes paid were slightly lower, the latter being perhaps an indication of existing economic conditions.

The expenditures for public works (mostly roads) were within a few hundred dollars of the amount paid last year. With the coming of elections two and five, the various divisions kept fairly close to their budget allowance of $1500.00 each. Division two was well under and division five well over their allowance. Weather and other conditions probably accounted for this.

To prepare a municipal statement in a manner easily understood by the average ratepayer is not a simple task. The form in which the statement appeared in this paper last week is prepared by government officials and a diligent study of it will give every ratepayer opportunity of forming his own conclusions of the standing of the municipality.

We still feel that everything considered, the Municipal District of Cornhill is as progressive as most municipalities and better than some. As regards road building and maintaining, which is some thing every municipality has to attend to, we can fully appreciate the difference of opinion regarding a policy of construction by large power units with cash payments for wages as against a policy of using local labor, horse units and having the work applied on some of the taxes due. We believe that a true appraisal of the "big machinery" policy is not possible in less than five years from the time it was embarked upon. By that time permanent roads as far as dirt roads can be made permanent, should be in evidence. The machinery should, by then, be paid for and a sufficient working capital established to lines developed. It might have been better at the start to have ratepayers vote as to whether a policy of this kind should be inaugurated or not, but the council of the day evidently believed that they were making the right move.

Now that this policy is in vogue, the machinery purchased and assets of it paid for, it would seem good business on the part of the ratepayers to support their council. We do not mean that criticism should be silenced or that there should be any slavish adherence to any particular policy, but it is possible to ruin a perfectly good policy by intense, even if well meaning, criticism. Each ratepayer generally judges his municipal affairs by the amount of taxes he or she has to pay, combined with general conditions within the district he or she lives in. It might be wise for ratepayers in this municipal district to contract their lot with farmers living in other municipal districts. Comparisons are always odious, we know, but sometimes it is the only way to arrive at a true estimate of worth.

Divide By Four

A man who was riding on a train through western ranch country aroused considerable interest among passengers in adjoining seats. As they sped along past vast cattle ranches, the man jotted down figures on a paper. Finally, one curious gent asked what he was doing.

"Well, you see," he explained, "I have a cattle ranch in New Mexico, and I am checking up on the stock these Texas ranchers keep."

The curious one looked at the paper, and sure enough, he saw a neat row of figures—472, 500, 316, 724. He was amazed, and asked, "Do you mind telling me how you can possibly count the cattle on each ranch as we whiz by at this speed?"

"That's easy," said the rancher; "I just count the legs and divide by four."—Wall Street Journal.

Scientific Agriculturists

There has recently been a good deal of discussion about asking industrial scientists to try to find industrial uses for surplus wheat, and in consequence of the fluctuation many people have jumped to the conclusion that agriculture must be poorly served with scientists. The truth is that this is a very strong opinion indeed, for agriculture has probably been even better served than industry with science and scientists. The records of history also appear to show that inventions made in agriculture by scientifically-minded persons have added very much more to the wealth and welfare of the people of the world than inventions that have been made in industry.

Scientific observations and inventions were being made in agriculture when industry was in its infancy and afterwards called wheat, or oats, or barley, or corn — could be made into bread that would support life; that these seeds or kernels could be sown in the ground and would multiply manyfold; in short, that the science of agriculture itself is one of the most important consequences, that caused man from base inventions now called agriculture.

First of all the tribe needed to settle in one place, for the constantly moving of animals from place to place to obtain food, made impossible the raising of crops in one place. Then it was found that it did not take all the people to grow food for the community, and that certain number of the people in the tribe, therefore, could be released from food production, and they could apply themselves to the producing of other things, and to the distribution of the arts and sciences, and eventually to industry.

Cattle Prices Should Improve

Some improvement in beef cattle prices may be expected during 1939, according to the Agricultural Situation and Outlook for 1939, which is about to be released by the Dominion Department of Agriculture and Board of Trade and Commerce. The prospective improvement is based on the expected reduction in cattle marketings during 1939, and a stronger domestic demand as a result of improving business conditions. The reduced supply of cattle entering the United States is also expected to lead export to the market in Canada.

Numbers of cattle on farms at June 1, 1938, were fewer than at the same date in 1937 and it is expected the period of June to December, 1938, sales of cattle and calves off farms for domestic and export trade were almost 36 per cent below those of the same period in 1937. Large supplies of live cattle and beef were moved during 1938, with a larger proportion of the total supply was taken by the domestic market than in the year in 1937.

The west-to-east shipments of feeder cattle in 1938 showed a reduction in Ontario and Quebec during the restocking period from June 1 to mid-October, the proportionate reduction being 53,000 head as compared with about 177,000 head in the corresponding period of 1937. This reduced movement was largely due to the relatively narrow the price of feeder steers in the fall of 1937 and that of finished cattle in the winter of 1938, and to the fact that with an abundance of cheap feed in the east in 1938 feeder cattle were held cattle at a pric- higher than eastern farmers were willing to pay. This contributed to the movement of feeder cattle to the East does not necessarily indicate a reduction in total output of grain-fed cattle during 1939, but rather a shift in the areas from which these cattle are drawn and fed. The reduced marketings from Eastern Canada will be offset, in part, by heavier marketings from the Prairie Provinces.

Prospects for the export of calves during 1939 are much improved by the terms of the new Canada-United States trade agreement which relates the maximum weight from 175 pounds to 200 pounds and increases the number permitted under the reduced duty. The duty reduction is from 2½ cents per pound, with an increase in the quota from 3,000 head to 10,000 head. Prospects for export of this type of cattle.

Ratepayers of Holden School Division No. 17 Form Trustees Association

Approximately one hundred ratepayers, including 45 delegates, of the Holden School Division No. 17, Jemond the lower floor of the Masonic Hall, Thursday afternoon, to discuss the advisability of forming a Trustees Association, and to voice their comments on many subjects, especially detrimental to local boards.

The assembly was called by the board of the Longridge S.D., with Albert Johnson officiating as Chairman, and F. J. Detmold as Secretary.

After some time taken up in general discussion, it was decided to proceed with the organization and the following were elected by the Board of Directors of the Association; John Cribb, Sub.Dist. 1; Charles Barber, 2; Carl Almgreen, 3; Albert Johnson, 4; Mrs. Thornley, 5. Albert Johnson of Holden, was elected chairman of the Board, the Secretary to be appointed at a later date.

Membership fee in the Association was placed at $1.00 per annum, and it was decided to ask the Divisional Board for a grant of $70.00 for the Association.

Dr. J. L. McPherson, M.L.A., addressed the gathering and invited all to co-operate in making a success of the Division.

J. H. McLean, Superintendent of the Division, called on the matter of Education, and Rural Telephone Local Boards.

F. J. Detmold was out for more authority for local boards, and the matter of awarding contracts for wood and coal under five. A resolution was adopted "that the calling for fuel tenders be left in the hands of local boards, and that it be submitted to the Divisional Board."

Mr. McLean, Superintendent of the Divisional Board, answered many questions, and at the end stated that the Division was on for approximately $1000.00 less than in 1937, after the clearing of the books for a lot of outstanding liabilities. —Holden Herald.

Detroit River Flows Backward

WINDSOR, Ont., Jan. 31—Startled Windsorites Monday saw the Detroit river flowing backward and laid down a telephone barrage of inquiries. Skeptical newspapermen were amazed when they checked and found the river flowing backward and against the wind just as fast as it usually travels the other way.

But U.S. lake survey officials were quite calm. The wind, they explained, had been blowing steadily in one direction for four days, piling up water in Lake Erie, so it was higher than Lake St. Clair, which usually is four feet higher than Lake Erie.

The 25-mile long Detroit river, linking the two lakes, was merely obeying the laws of nature by running backward. Survey officials said it had happened before several years ago.

Tofield Woman Slain In East

TORONTO, Jan. 31—Mrs. Annie Gernasch, 36, died on the way to hospital Monday night of a rifle wound through the head which police said was inflicted by William Petrukowich, 29.

Authorities said Petrukowich turned a .22 calibre rifle on himself after shooting the woman. He was in critical condition in hospital under police guard, two bullet wounds near his heart.

Charge of murder against Petrukowich was read at police court Tuesday and court officials were declared to go to a guarded hospital room to remand him formally until Feb. 7.

Investigation showed both the man and the woman came here several months ago from Tofield, Alta.

Mrs. Gernasch was moving from a Bathurst st. house to one on Camden st. when the shooting occurred Petrukowich was alleged to have shot her down on a row-covered sidewalk before the Bathurst st. home, then to have fired a bullet into his chest. Falling to the ground, he sat up, pulled another cartridge from a boot pocket and fired it into his chest.

Mrs. Gernasch is survived by her husband, John, and two children, Mary, seven, and Frank, eight, all at Tofield.

Johnny Kubicka, a trucker hired by Mrs. Gernasch to move her belongings to Camden st. and he drove with the woman to the Bathurst st. address. En route she told him a man had been "bothering her," Kubicka told the police.

When they got to the house, Petrukowich came in.

"Annie, I want to talk to you," he was quoted as saying.

"Go on away," the woman was reported to have replied. "I don't want to talk to you."

Kubicka said he carried the woman's trunk to the truck and turned around to see her fall to the ground. Considerable traffic was passing, he told the police, and he did not hear a shot. The trucker ran to a drug store to call police.

CLOVERDALE 4—TOFIELD 5

On Saturday night a community district team from Edmonton clashed with Tofield on the local rink. The game was fast, quite boisterous and had all kinds of hockey mixed up in it.

The first period was the best of the three, being featured by end to end rushes, good clean shots on goal and good work by both goal keepers. Bowck in goal for Tofield was a shining out in this period and Stewart for Edmonton had work to do too. In this period Tofield scored twice, Bears getting both counters. Edmonton failed to beat Bowck in this period

In the second period Edmonton scored twice and Tofield once A. Smith and E. Scott scoring for the visitors and Sears for the locals In the third period both teams scored twice, Newsome and Clarke scoring for Edmonton and Sears and Worton for Tofield Final score 4-5 for Tofield

Tofield — H Bowck; L. Glover; R. Evetts, Worton, Smith; J Bowck; Sears, Sears; Stauffer

Referee—Bob Evans.

HOLDEN 6—TOFIELD 5

On Monday night Tofield met Holden at Tofield in a return game. Holden came out on the long end of a 5-3 score.

Owing to some of the hard game Saturday and playing without the services of Stauffer and Worton being the marksmen.

The third period was battled on fairly even terms, Sears scoring one good each, the final score being 5-3 in favor of Tofield.

Holden: Bostch; Logan; Edwerby; Black; Glynes; Dover; Preece; Sharp; Good, Forsythe; N Gryces.

TOFIELD HIGH SCHOOL 1— RILEY HIGH SCHOOL 1

In a fairly good game at Tofield on Wednesday evening, Tofield High School trounced Riley High School by a 9-1 score The game was not nearly as one-sided as the score would indicate, but Tofield had quite an edge. The middle two minutes of the second period was by far the best hockey of the game and at the time Tofield fans were betting all kinds of even terms with Tofield showing up a little better in systematic rushing and shooting. Quite a number of Tofield scores came by breakaways when the Riley team were all up the ice trying to score.

Lineup—Tofield: Warner; Swinney; Bisley; Stauffer; Moore; C. Worton, L. Worton; F. Johnson.

GENERAL:— During the year, a spite of the additional school expense, the general expenditure was very close to the annual receipts. Expenditures exceeded receipts by $106.61. In January 1938, the council sold the local theatre to W.R. Sharp for Calgary. This has been taken over by the town some three or four months ago. Expenditure on the property by the town of Holden including a modern projection room and $75.00 for the seats and furniture, was repaid to the sale made to Mr Sharp. The town also retires the total amount of taxes which had accrued against the property it is gratifying to know that the theatre is again available for public meetings, etc., and that regular moving picture shows of consistently high standard are being put on.

During the year agreements were entered into between the town and Holden Exhibition, namely the General, Mistrewells, University, and Royal Alexandra hospitals providing for admission of patients resident in the town of Tofield. The term features of these agreements is that no patient resident in Tofield shall be excluded from any of these hospitals on account of inability at the time of admission to pay any portion of the account to be incurred. This does not free any person from the liability to pay the account incurred, but does guarantee their admission to a hospital when hospital treatment and accomodation is necessary.

COMMUNICATION

Dear Mr. Editor,

May I have space in your paper to raises to ratepayers more information in regard to the affairs of our municipality. This is made possible and is of more value since your paper reaches all resident ratepayers. I shall try to give each in an brief manner as I possibly can.

We have heard considerable criticism in regard to the amount paid for making the assessments, and comparing it with amount paid to assessors in other municipalities, particularly to the one east of us. On looking at the map you will find Cornhill Municipality is approximately fifty per cent larger in area, and is in much more difficult area to assess. Besides this fact, there is a lot of office work to be done at the office, and the assessors cannot do both, therefore he must have a man on to do it and pay them from the amount he receives. In the financial statement it is shown that 12c per acre received $1342.66, whereas the amount agreed upon by resolution was $1080. The difference was paid to the assessors for keeping the office open to the general public in the Grand Prairie Spirit In the old days Rev did the publicine while Bert and Ed did the surveying, and were mostly surprised to hear not even an "Ah" The Tofield Mercator must have had Hard Luck as he lost in the final. Mr. Blozett also lost his game, but Tofield Curling Club won the match and were Mr. Tom Schultz and Mr. J. Oliver Letourneau.

We attended some of the Club games this week and was very much impressed by the brands of curling. Mr Woods and Mr. Currie had a nip and tuck game and all members of the teams showed a very thorough knowledge of the game.

BEHIND THE HOG

Notice the change in my heading —We have been severely reprimanded especially by the Ladies, for our remarks in the last two issues. Truth sometimes stranger than fiction—In future any News concerning the Fair Sex will be handled by the Society Editor, and our remarks confining the Mrs Carters will also be cut down. Soon I quit altogether.

Mr. William Warton jr., president of the Young People's Society, being in a grateful mood for the success of his late "Spiel" rose to thank the Draw and Ice Committees, Gerald for his hard work, when suddenly remembering the Gastronomical efforts, anybody else who feels that HE is entitled to some praise, somewhere, somehow, and now having spread his gratitude over this area, he makes his bow and retires till the next spiel

We noticed our old Curling Pals, Mr Red Skitch and Mr. Geo. Bissett were successful in getting to the Finals of the big Bonspiel events in the Grand Prairie Spirit In the old days Rev did the publicine while Bert and Ed did the surveying, and were mostly surprised to hear not even an "Ah" The Tofield Mercator must have had Hard Luck as he lost in the final. Mr. Blozett also lost his game, but Tofield Curling Club won the match and were Mr. Tom Schultz and Mr. J. Oliver Letourneau.

Second Installment

SYNOPSIS

When the Wealthy foster parents of Marjorie Wetherill both died while finds a letter telling that she has a twin sister, that she was adopted when her own parents couldn't afford to support both of them and needed money to save her sister's life and that her real name is Dorothy Gay Alexe in the world, but with a fortune of her own, she considers looking up her own family who she has never seen. A neighbor, Evan Bower, tries to argue her out of it and tells her he lavks her and asks her to marry him. She promises to think it over but at the time is more concerned with finding her own family.

She looked up at him quietly, and smiled a cold wistful smile. Then she added

"I m sorry to seem so—uncertain—and so—unappreciative—of your love. But I just can't seem to think to-night!"

He was a wise young man and he saw that he couldn't get further tonight.

He stooded her for a moment and then his lips set in a firm line of determination.

"Very well," he said quite cheerfully. "I am just your friend for now, but a very special friend, you know. One whom you can call upon for anything. Will you feel that?"

She smiled with relief

"Yes," she said. "Thank you! Good night!" and she put out her hand and gave his a brief impersonal clasp.

Marjorie found she was too excited to sleep when she laid her head on her pillow But strangely enough it was not on the eager prospect of love that her mind dwelt most during that night's vigil, but more on his hesitations that she should not search out her people. And the more she thought of it, the less she thought of Evan.

She awoke in the morning with the definite purpose in her heart to get the matter over with at once. She would start right away before anything else could possibly delay her. If any more people came in and tried to stir her from her purpose she would become bewildered again.

She called up the station and made her reservation on the train then left the city a little after six that night.

She took her check book and plenty of money, carefully stowed as she had been taught to do when traveling. She left no address with anybody. She did not want anybody coming and after her to try to hinder her in whatever she should try to do.

And so at last she was on her way, quite worn out with the tumult of her decision and her preparations.

The next morning she arrived in the strange city and went to a hotel. After attempting a sketchy breakfast she took a taxi and drove to the address she had been given in the letter.

It seemed a very long drive, out through a seedy part of the city, and then into a careful street of little cheap houses all alike, brick houses with wooden porches in no endless row, block after block, with untidy coal vacant lots across the street, nothing to implement ash heaps. It was before the last house in the row that the taxi stopped.

I think perhaps you had better wait for me a minute or two until I make sure this is the right place," she said hesitantly, as she eyed the house with displeasure.

So, on feet that were strangely unsteady, she got out and went slowly up the two wooden steps to the door that sadly needed paint. There was no bell so she knocked timidly, and then again louder as she heard no sound of life within. She was just about to turn away, almost hoping they were gone, and she would have no clue to search further, when she heard hurried steps on the bare floor, and the door was opened sharply, almost impatiently. Then she found herself face to face with a replica of herself!

"Does Mrs. George Gay live here?" She said the words because she had prepared them on her lips to say, but she was so startled at the apparition of herself in the flesh standing before by that she did not realize she had asked the question. She just stood there and stared and this stared at this other girl who was so like and yet so unlike herself

The other girl had the same cloud of golden hair, only it was flying in every direction, not smoothly waved in the way it ought to be; the same brown eyes, only they were full of and Mother in sick spatials in bed brightness, and trouble, and a kind of fright at the sight of her; the same rounded face and a hot-water bag at definite lips, only they were set in hand them as if the grim realities of life had been too close to her.

"Well," she said with a final little

MUNICIPAL MATTERS—

THE CONTROVERSY running in this paper between Mr. Will Abernethy and Reeve Glenn will probably do much to clear up some matters which ratepayers are not conversant with. There is really only one basic interest to serve, that of the municipality. And to this one interest all personal feeling, all personal ambition and all personal gain must be subservient. When writing regarding public affairs due allowance must always be given to the difference of opinion and quite often difference of opinion is just a matter of more knowledge. One councillor remarked quite recently, 'when I first came on the council I thought I knew all about it, but after the first meeting I realized I knew little.'

It is not our intention to enumerate, one by one, all the points brought out in the letters pertaining to municipal matters that have been published. But it would do no harm to mention one or two. As regards the spending of about $1250.00 on a vault when the Act only allowed the expenditure of $1000.00, without recourse to the ratepayers, we feel there is much to be said for nothing. Assuming of course, that the council needed a vault, received value for money, and that money paid out for labor was well earned, $200 more or less on an expenditure of this nature, is relatively unimportant. There are few things less spectacular and more necessary than a vault. We have already in previous issues mentioned vaults, and there is little to be gained by mere repetition. In his letter this week Mr. Glenn mentions the amount paid the assessor, and perhaps a few words relative to this appointment should be written. First of all, the assessor is not compulsory —the government through the department ordered it and Mr. Stinson was appointed assessor at $1250. Whether this figure is high, low or medium, we do not propose to know. We naturally assume that the farmer councillors would be able to arrive at a fair enough figure. The assessing consists of two parts, office work and field work, and the assessor sublet the office part, or at least some of it, back into the municipal building. We feel that there are just grounds for criticism here. If the assessment is something entirely separate from routine municipal office work, the money expended on it should go to entirely separate sources. If any portion of the assessment can be done within the municipal office this portion should be included in the regular work of the office staff. In any event, when the amount expended on assessment is shown in the financial statement and it is known there are two distinct portions, they should be shown as such. We mention this because until Tuesday we assumed that Mr. Stinson had netted, less travelling expenses, the amount voted for assessment. It should be specially noted that assuming the $1250.00 figure was a reasonable amount to allow for an assessment and a reasonably good job was done, the ratepayers were not hurt any no matter how the money was divided. But we do believe the division should have been shown in the statement.

We would like to make a suggestion that more council meetings per year be held. For some years past, eight meetings have been held, with the result that the work for councillors to do piles up tremendously. Ten meetings a year at least should be held, twelve would be better, but perhaps a concession to next time and harvest could be made. The amount the meetings cost would be more than offset by the closer contact with current affairs.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By R. G. L. Strange, Director "The Crop Testing Plot."

"We want to buy food and raw materials and to sell in exchange our wheat. We want our part goods to enable us to buy food. The German people need export goods or die."

This is the kernel of Mr. Hitler's recent speech to the world. It gives the key also to the real basic cause of most of our troubles today. Germany, and other countries too, must export more goods if they are to secure the foodstuffs, clothing and other raw materials their people badly need, but high tariffs and other restrictions against trade imposed by the victors for the Great War have made it impossible for Britain, France and other people to obtain the things they need; and so the peoples of these lands have suffered.

We all know that people who suffer become at last of the simple necessities of life, do not always lie down peaceably. Political opportunist, unfortunately, does not find much use for clothes, foodstuffs, amusement is what is really needed.

Let the countries, such as the United States, Canada, and others that hold the means foodstuffs and raw materials, lower their tariffs, so permitting foreign goods to enter more freely. Then the surpluses of wheat and other products will soon disappear, prices will rise, unemployment will lessen, and the blessings of peace will be with us again.

Following factors have tended to raise prices: Winter wheat acreage in England and Wales 6 per cent. below a year ago—Reduction in Chile, one oil and oilseed crop—Continuity reserve stocks maintained in Argentina, Australia, Roumanian and French wheats —Official Argentine corn acreage below last year.

Following factors have tended to lower prices: Further rains in Argentina result in more optimistic corn reports—Stocks of bread grains in Germany 166 million above a year ago—U.S.A. officially makes slight increase in world wheat acreage—Italy places new duty on imports of wheat and flour.

Quite True

"Boy," said the mistress of the house, "are your feet clean?"

"Yes, ma'am," he answered, still going on, "it's only me boots that's dirty."—Punch Journal (Dundee)

Might Be That

"A commission is a period sitting on top of a comma, Some think that the first time a commission was used was when some man did not know whether to use a comma or a period, so he used both of them together."—Passing Show.

The Wheat Situation

For the past several months world wheat carryover have been showing large stocks of glucose. The heavy crop—supply and almost continuous bumper crops has made the price outlook dark. Of late weeks an occasional gleam of sunshine has penetrated the cumbersome and a few factors have been injected into the picture.

Of course, it is true that nothing has occurred to minimize to any extent the depressing effect of a prospective world carryover of 1,200 million bushels. That will continue to have a deadening effect on the market, but there is hope that the 1939 world crop will be substantially smaller in quantity that the record-breaking crop of 4,471 million bushels harvested in 1938. The best thing that could happen to the wheat trade would be the harvesting of a crop like the year of half a billion bushels less than last years outturn.

Whatever optimism there is in the market is presty well concentrated at Chicago. It is believed that the United States has about reached its objective of 100 million bushels exports and can look forward to being cushioned on its full outstanding orders. It is believed that the winter wheat acreage will be over-sown in the spring to a substantial extent. Recent widespread precipitation has improved the crop's condition but it will take ideal weather to furnish an average yield on the acreage seeded.

On the continent of Europe it is quite possible that seeding operations will be done over by severe weather. Europe in 1938 harvested a record crop of 1,814 million bushels. If this year's crop is down to 1,600 million it would help world wheat conditions a lot. Undoubtedly, there has been substantial feeding of low grade wheat to livestock in Europe.

If European nations turn towards a more peaceful mood there will be no inclination towards a revival of armaments. There is no doubt that one of the fact that the German nation is seriously under-nourished. Working men have to have their bellies filled and are hard-pressed to get enough to eat for their families and themselves. Germany is said to be spending 81¼ billion a year for armament and her money is expended from routine municipality office work, the money expended on it should go to entirely separate sources. If any portion of the assessment can be done within the municipal office this portion should be included in the regular work of the office staff. In any event, when the amount expended on assessment is shown in the financial statement and it is known there are two distinct portions, they should be shown as such. We mention this because until Tuesday we assumed that Mr. Stinson had netted, less travelling expenses, the amount voted for assessment. It should be specially noted that assuming the $1250.00 figure was a reasonable amount to allow for an assessment and a reasonably good job was done, the ratepayers were not hurt any no matter how the money was divided. Salmon Congestion Invade The Glenmor Circles

All out to go to town are these salmon congestion, with a little "top hat" of tartare sauce for their best friends and tucker. Along with some French Fried potatoes, you have a dressed up "fish and chips" dish that will win hahes of popularity for you from the most important soul-ave in the social-register-ave family circle Don't take our word for it, try these salmon croquettes and see for yourself!

"Top Hat" Salmon Croquettes
2 cups flaked Canadian salmon
Pepper
1 cup thick white sauce, hot
Crumbs
Salt
Juice of half a lemon
1 egg, beaten

Flake the salmon, pounding the bones fine (these have valuable calcium) add salt, pepper, lemon juice, and 1 cup of hot, thick white sauce (using the salmon oil and juice as part of the liquid—this contains valuable elements, too). Mix well and spread on a platter to cool. Shape into balls, making a depression in the top of each ball. Roll in fine crumbs, dip in slightly beaten egg with a tablespoon cold water, and again in crumbs. Fry in deep, hot fat. Drain on unglazed paper, and serve with a little tartared sauce in each depression, with a few sprigs of parsley or a thin slice of pickle or stuffed olive.

Speaking of salmon, did you know you had the "makings" of a quick lunch or a nightly supper in the can on the emergency shelf? Just open it, drain, remove the skin, and spread on half-inch pieces as possible on a baking pan. Season with a little lemon juice, salt and some of the juice and broil quickly. Along with these quick standbys—sardines a mustard, plain boiled, buttered and sprinkled with grated cheese—and a can of any green vegetable that leaves a really enlarged onion for lack and flavour, you need never be at a loss for a tasty lunch.

New Varieties Of Grasses

(Experimental Farms News)

During recent years a number of comparatively new varieties of grasses have become prominent as forage crops in the Prairie Provinces, states F. E. Clarke, Dominion Experimental Station, Swift Current, Sask. These new varieties are of particular value owing to their adaptation to certain soil and moisture conditions as found on the prairies. Some of these new grasses are as follows:

Crested Wheat Grass

The hardy perennial grass was introduced from Siberia to the United States about forty years ago. However, it is only recently that its real value as a forage plant in western Canada has been demonstrated. At one of the best grass available and for hay and pasture purposes under dryland conditions; as well as for the reclamation of abandoned fields and depleted native pastures. While "Fairway" is the best strain of crested wheat grass at present, there is much being developed which may prove superior under very dry conditions.

Parkland Brome

This variety of brome is more or less of a bunch-grass type. Root stocks are either absent or not as well developed as in common brome; therefore, it is not as likely to become root-bound, nor is it as difficult to eradicate. Brome grass pasture fields in fairly moist soils. At the Swift Current Experimental Station brome has outyielded the common variety on irrigated fields

Reed Canary Grass

This is a lowland grass and a native of western Canada. It makes palatable and nutritious fodder and is being used to an extent in the west, before it can be recommended for general use

Western Wheat Grass

This is a native grass of the prairies and is one of the most valuable grasses for the dry areas. It is a hardy perennial and while it requires plenty of moisture to produce good yields, it does not kill out readily during dry seasons.

Wild Rye Grass (Elymus Junceus)

This hardy perennial grass has been introduced from Europe. In tests conducted at the Manyberries and Swift Current Experimental Stations it has proven as drought resistant as crested wheat grass. This grass must be tested further, however, before it can be recommended for general use

JERSEY CHAMPION BUTTERFAT PRODUCER

The seven-year-old Jersey cow, "Calgarth Starlight" 17470, owned and developed by the Dominion Experimental Station, Summerland, B.C., has completed her 12th official record, bringing her the world's record for life-time production of butterfat for a Jersey cow She has produced 18,642 pounds of milk and 1,797 pounds of butterfat, and is doing so has wrested the title from Sophie 19th, of Hood Farm, which has held the record for many years with a production of 7,544 pounds of butterfat

At 17 years of age, Starlight still shows wonderful strength of constitution and feeding capacity; in fact, she is an exceptionally good feeder and has never been sick a day in her life She has borne ten bull calves and five heifer calves.

Rotary Plows To Keep Roads Open

Proposed to keep the main highways open in case of a heavy fall of snow suddenly, two modern rotary snow plows bought last fall by the provincial department of public works, are standing by in Edmonton and Calgary.

These rotary plows, first of the kind to be used in this province, were purchased at a cost of $1,000 each. They are intended primarily for deep snow which they lift and hurl a considerable distance off the roadway.

Tests of these plows, which were conducted some time ago, showed that they would give results on Alberta highways.

Owing to the comparatively light snowfall this winter, rotary plows have not been required. So far, lighter plows operated by the public works department have kept the roads open in many places where there was danger of a blockade.

Securing of modern snow plow equipment is in accordance with representations which were made to the winter, say A.M.A. officials.

"The Farmers' Servants"

The farmers in Western Canada enjoy the services of innumerable servants, who are all striving to serve, and who through their work are endeavoring to enhance the producers' welfare.

Retail and wholesale merchants, professional men such as doctors and lawyers; Municipal, Provincial and Federal officials; the many fields of work; country school, high school, and university teachers, lecturers and professors; industrial workers who make implements, clothing and other goods, commodities and products used by the farming family; officials and workers in transportation and shipping companies; officials in banks; those who make electricity for farmers; members of the press; officials and workers of companies and organizations handling the farmers' products; and also of course, many other people engaged in other businesses. Among these are thousands handling the farmers' products, perhaps even more than the farmer, nor give him more constant, careful, exacting and faithful service than the Canadian Pacific Railway.

What a sum of diverse accomplishments! Not any efficient farmer but must be! An expert on the many grades of several different kinds of grain; a judge of livestock; a mechanic both to operate and repair machinery; a good lumper of books and records; a man of judgement; a business man; a salesman of his company's products or his community's products; and very frequently, because of the scarcity of efficient help, a man who is depended upon by many people in his district to be a friend in grain handling and marketing, but sometimes on crop production and other farm matters. Truly a man such as the Elevator Agent must be an honest, upright and resolute man, must have a thorough knowledge of human nature; must be able to keep his head in the confusion of busy times and difficult circumstances; must be charged with the entire care of the interests of his company, yet who at the same time, and to exactly the same degree, must feel himself under the proper interests of his farmer customers, for he has the same Elevator Agent in a man required to possess many talents.

Was High Position

It is not natural that many Elevator Agents who possess these talents and so who are successful, have at times attained good positions in this world. In the United States and in Canada there are many men in dignified high and responsible positions who started life as Elevator Agents. There have been in the past, and still are to-day, Cabinet Ministers, Premiers and in the United States who had their first start in life managing a country elevator.

History tells us that managing an elevator, or public granary is one of the very oldest of occupations. Historians tell us of the advancement of men to high positions who started as Elevator Agents. In the Scenic Grain Company's museum at Winnipeg there is a replica of a model of one of the first commercial buildings known to man, that of a Grain Elevator or Granary containing a number of bins, found in the Egyptian Tomb which was closed and sealed to the world 3000 B.C. The very same agency of this elevator there stands a model of the Elevator Agent or Granary Keeper of that time. He seems are on his shoulder, apparently supervising, talking, and is done under the Elevator Agent, to serve the farmers who may bring their grain to him.

Depression Stopped Many

We all know the story of Joseph, who was sold into Egypt in 1700 B.C. While perhaps we could not exactly call Joseph an Elevator Agent, still he was the man who sold all the grain and of all the granaries in Egypt in the Great Chiefs Pharaoh's dream. Noted man who unquestionably was just simply an Elevator Agent was the Great Chiefs Pharaoh's dream. Saint, Confucius himself, who, it will be remembered, founded a philosophy and religion that even to-day affects the lives of hundreds of millions of people in the world. Confucius' official biography tells us that the first position Confucius held in life as a young man—about 550 B.C.—was that of keeper in charge of the Grain Granary of the Baron Chi, and it is stated particularly that Confucius was noted for the fairness of its measures." So successful was Confucius in this position that he was soon placed in charge of the entire agricultural work of the Baron Chi, and then afterwards was promoted to be Minister of Public Works for the government.

It would appear, then, that these are excellent precedents to indicate that being an Elevator Agent is a most worthy vocation, and that the experiences which the Elevator Agent may gain is a good one for leading also to still higher, more important and more responsible positions in life.—Searle Grain Company, Ltd.

MINISTIK

Congratulations go to the Minstik Hockey Boys, who with the aid of Mr. S. L. Edwards, have made a more or less permanent rink 85 by 185 feet. It is situated half mile north of the Minstik tan, nestled in a bluff of spruce and poplar. Surrounded with a 6 foot board fence with a heated dressing room. It is indeed a skating rink which any community should be proud of.

On Sunday February 5th, Hastings Lake, with the team picked from 3 years of fierce battles in the Minstik Rink, came home on the same mood in a 4 to 3 all tie. The game was a regular Rugby Scramble with all were tired four tires of strong regulations. It is said that dealers want keep protection from the fans, but when a number of fouls bought, some thought the game a bit too strenuous and dangerous. Anyway we did see a few clean-cut body checks and three goals. We'd be chicked up, Minstik Rink is open for a real good old fashioned hockey match and other games throughout the winter, if desired.

Mr. Traves Speaks At Poultry Meeting

On Thursday February 2nd a meeting of poultry producers was held in the Tofield building

Mr. Mellows, the field man of the poultry branch for this district, was in the chair and introduced the speaker, Mr. Traves, the poultry commissioner for Alberta.

Mr. Traves dealt with a petition he had received from this district, on behalf of Mr. A. Young, a dealer. He said that if proposed legislation were passed at the coming session, all he would have would be 4 cents per dozen on home or the same used in a long two years' while by certain producers which no doubt would be a staggering matter for a number of small broiler raisers. All were told that the dealer must keep producers and that he was a number of birds bought, now bought and prices paid for that unscrupulous dealers and threats, he'd be checked up. Mr. Traves left considerable food with the assembled traders and other means of combatting the spread of disease.

Mr. Traves left yesterday for Edmonton where she is on training. A good number of her personal and everyone reports a jolly time. A tempting lunch was served at midnight. Pearl returned to her duties in the city on Monday morning.

HOCKEY

Brever it is never too cold to work up much enthusiasm over hockey. The only game we have to record was played last Saturday night between the fast stepping Ironsites and the local team, Tofield. It was a good game, quite clean and the home team won. Hockey can't be served up much better.

The score was 8-0 for Tofield and Bobby still represents the run of play. The Irons were a fast, snappy aggregation, but the local boys by their nice like backs and the forwards were unable to get any of their plays working. Bowlds is good for Tofield played a stellar game. The first goal was by Mackinnon up to assist by Brown in the first round and came after a rush and a missing from the Irons goal. The second goal was in the second period and was scored by Smith on a shot from one of the other players The third period was scoreless. The game throughout was quite good and had the weather not been so intensely cold would have drawn a much larger crowd.

Tofield —H. Bonch, L. Glover, N. Glover, Scats, Smith, Beirne J. Bowlds, Brown, Merritt, Mackinnon, Stauffer.

At The Variety Next Tuesday

Sharp's Shows are pleased to announce that the Variety Theatre next Tuesday a picture of Annapolis "Navy Blue and Gold." It is a story of love and ambition. A story of disillusion and disappointment, yet at the end triumphant achievement. There are sparkling naval parades, smart bands with crashing music. There is the atmosphere of the dry, rollicking and boisterous, which in a few brief moments is changed to the grim earnestness of the football field. And through all the picture runs the love of two men for one woman—a woman only one of them could have. In addition there is the news reel, comedy and other features. Usual admission. Show starts at 8.30.

HASTINGS LAKE HOCKEY NEWS

Last Sunday the "Aces" went to Minstik for a return game. A very exciting game the game stood at 3 all and one game failed to break the deadlock. What they did do, however, was a large number of hockey sticks. We'll bet they'll be sorry if we hope the girls won't follow your example, but somehow or other we doubt it.

It is reported that High School will play the same team on Saturday night, providing the ice is not too soft (sarden a printer's error). This should be an interesting game to see. How about a little vocal support out there, hockey fans?

On Friday, February 3rd, the Hockey boys staged a dance at the local school and in spite of a cold night a quite successful. They wish to thank all those who attended and also one or two who sent along their contribution.

COMMUNICATION

Editor Tofield Mercury,
Tofield, Alta.

Dear Editor,

In your issue of February 9th, Reeve Glenn in making comparisons of the Municipal Districts of Tofield and other Municipal Districts, particularly the one to the East of us, I think that we may assume that he has reference to the Municipal District of Beaverhills, he makes the statement "that by looking at the map you will find Cornhill M.D. is approximately 50 per cent larger in area and more difficult to assess." The auditor's report of the Cornhill M.D. gives total assessed acreage in the Municipal District at 278,160.77, and the auditor's report of the Beaver Lake M.D. gives their total assessed acreage as 283,250.00

In the minutes of the meetings of the Council on June 3rd, we read it was decided to divide up the business of the Council for the year 1939. On July 31st, 1939, it goes on to the Imperial Oil, August 1st to the end of the season to be decided later Was the decision of the Council carried out, and if not why?

Now, with regard to your article re Municipal matters in your issue of February 9th, I think that your attitude with regard to the assessment will meet with the approval of all ratepayers What the ratepayers have been objecting to for years is that while the land values and hence the amount of salary the Secretary-Treasurer is supposed to receive, he has been getting bonuses, commissions and income from different sources, which he, in the opinion of the ratepayers, has not

When the wealthy banker parents of Marjorie Wetherill both die she finds a letter telling that she has a twin sister, that she was adopted when her parents couldn't afford to support both of them and that her real name is Dorothy Gay. Alone in the world but with a fortune of ten cents, she considers looking up her own family whom she has never seen. A neighbor, Brian Bowyer, tries to argue her out of it and tells her he loves her and asks her to marry him. She promises to think it over but decides first to see her family. She goes to their address and finds that they are destitute, have sold all of their furniture, have no coal, her mother is sick and her father has had to go to work. She gives them the money and secretly her offer of help, but finally, after many explanations, agrees to take money to buy coal and food in order to save her mother's life.

"But it isn't her money now! It is mine! And I am going to look after my family! We are going to do it together! Quick! Tell me where to go, and I'll have the furnace here in about ——"

"It's two blocks down, and a block to the right. Brown's Coal Yard. But there's a bill for twenty-three dollars. They won't need any coal till it's paid. Here! Take back the money!"

She held out the roll of bills half reluctantly, looking at it with a sort of fierce whiteness.

"No," said Margaret. "You keep that. You must in my name. You might have some need for it while I'm gone. Don't worry, I'll find my way. But say, what shall I call you? I can't exactly go around calling my own sister 'Miss Gay' can I? And you know I never knew your name."

The sister girl stared.

"You don't mean they never told you your own sister's name! Well, that certainly is funny! I'm Elma—both. They call me Betty."

Her voice was a trifle uncertain.

"That's a pretty name, Betty Gay! I like it. And—I'm Dorothy—isn't that it? The letter told me that."

"Yes, but they call you Marjorie!" Betty's voice was suddenly hard again.

"Well, I couldn't help that either," grinned Marjorie. "Say, suppose you stop having grudges awhile."

Betty suddenly softened again and almost smiled, and Marjorie saw that her eyes were really lovely when she smiled.

"I'm sorry!" said Betty. "I guess I've been pretty poisonous to you. But maybe if you'd been here and seen your people you loved suffer, you'd be poisonous too."

"I'm sure I should!" said Marjorie with a sudden quick setting of her lips. "I'm quite sure I would feel just so you feel. And now let's forget it till we get this place comfortable for you all."

Marjorie turned and put her hand out to open the door, but before she quite touched it someone fumbled at the knob from the outside, the door was suddenly flung open with a bang letting in a rush of cold air, and someone stumbled into the hall bearing a heavy burden.

Marjorie stepped back startled, staring at the tall man carrying a heavy sack of coal upon his back and another of small pieces of wood in his arms.

But Betty rushed forward and put up her arms to take one bag from him.

"Oh, Father!" she cried, "where have you been? How did you get it?" And then, giving him a quick searching look, "Where is your overcoat, Father? Oh, you didn't sell your overcoat, did you? Your nice overcoat! Oh, Father, and you are sick!"

"It couldn't be hoped, Bet," said the man in a hoarse voice. "I had to get that home worse somehow for your mother I couldn't let her freeze to death!" There was something warm and tender in his voice that brought the tears to Marjorie's eyes and a great rush of love for her unknown father to her heart.

Then the man suddenly dropped the bag from his back to the floor, put his hands up to his head with a bewildered look, and staggered over to the stairs.

"Father! Oh, Father! What is it?" cried Betty rushing over to him.

"Oh, it's nothing!" murmured the man with an effort. "Just a little dizzy, that's all. I'll be all right in a minute!"

That picture of her father sitting on the stairs, his head bowed in his hands, would stay with her always, she knew.

"I'll get you a drink of water!" Betty was saying. "Thank fortune, they haven't turned off the water yet!" and she vanished through the door into the kitchen.

Marjorie saw them a door from the little parlor where she had come and opening it she followed and found her sister as she brought fresh water.

"I'll get him something to eat right away," she whispered. "Is there a restaurant or any place nearby where they have food?"

"Shop the strangers. You can get a bottle of milk. Yes, there is a lunch queen."

Marjorie ran down the uneven little sidewalk, breathless with the thought of her father eating there in the bare ugly room, cold and hungry, dizzy with faintness, and her mother, no telling how sick yourself! It was too dreadful!

Arrived breathless at the diminutive drugstore she found to her joy that they had a soda fountain and served soup or coffee with sandwiches. There was hot coffee and there was hot tomato soup, that is, it was when it was put on the gas, but it couldn't possibly be cold enough to need much heat to a fifty. And so she had just two thermos bottles left. He hadn't had such a large order in months.

While he was getting them ready Marjorie hurried across the street to the grocery and bought two bottles of milk enough to carry her purchases, and also a package of crackers, a loaf of bread, a pound of butter and a pound of sliced ham.

Back at the drugstore she added a quart full of milk to buy other purchases and hurried home with her burden.

Arrived at the house she found the front door unlatched, but her father was no longer sitting on the stairs, and Betty was not in sight in the cellar.

Betty came hurrying up the cellar stairs as she came out to the kitchen a long streak of soot on one white cheek and her eyes full of anxiety.

"He would go down and start the fire," she said in distress. "I knew he couldn't do anything with him." Her voice was almost like a sob. "He always thinks a woman has to be waited on, but he's had another dizzy spell and he's sitting on the cellar stairs now. Did you get anything?"

"Yes," said Marjorie eagerly, "I brought hot soup and coffee, and here's some scrambled eggs and ham. I hope that will help too. And here, I have two hot-water bags nice and hot. Take one down and put it on his lap. Haven't you got a flannel or bit of old something to wrap it in? He ought to get warm right away."

"Oh, you're great!" said Betty and the tears were rolling down her cheeks, tears of relief.

She snatched a sliced cup from the shelf and poured out coffee and with a hot-water bag under her arm hurried down cellar again.

Marjorie hunted around and found plates and more cups and a knife, and cut some slices of bread, buttering them and putting the ham between them. When Betty came back up stairs she had a platterful of nice sandwiches ready for her, quick, it wasn't take you but a minute, and you can work better with something inside of you. Take this sandwich in your hand, and carry a cup of something up to Mother. Which should it be? Coffee first, or soup, or let's abide for them? I've got oranges and bananas I can fix her a glass of orange juice in no time!"

"Oh, wonderful!" said Betty gratefully, her eyes filling with relieved tears again. "I—don't know—what we would—have done if you—hadn't ——"

"There! Never mind that now. Just drink a little soup and then go up to Mother. As soon as she knows about me I can help you care for her. I know how to take care of sick people. And now, shall I just skip out and have that coal sent up? You haven't got enough to last long in these bags and the house ought to get thoroughly warm and stay so. And while I'm out I'm going to order some groceries in that store I went to the best, or is there a better one somewhere else?"

"That's the best near here. They're all right. Ted will be home by and by perhaps and bring the things up for you."

Betty with her sandwich in her hand went down cellar, and hurried up again.

"He's eaten all the soup and is eating his sandwich now. I think he feels better.

So Betty flew away up the stairs, and back again in a moment.

"She is still asleep," she whispered. "Has she had a doctor?" asked Marjorie.

"No, she wouldn't let us. She said we hadn't the money to pay him. But Father is almost crazy about it. I think we ought to have him come just once, anyway, don't you?"

"I certainly do!" said Marjorie. "Where is he? I'll get him before I do anything else."

Betty gave the name and address. "He's supposed to be a good doctor. I guess his prices are rather high," she said sorrowfully.

"What difference does that make?" said Marjorie. "We want the best there is. I'll send him as soon as I can, and you had better get what he prescribe for Father too. I'll tell him about it, and you make that. And, when do I talk to the gas people to have them turned on? We want to be able to cook our own real dinner by night!"

"Oh!" said Betty, quick tears stinging into her eyes. "You are going to stay, then, aren't you?"

"No," said Marjorie smiling, "I'm just going to be one of the family, about a day and night, that is. Long enough to carry her purchases, and also a few provisions, and then I must go back to my own family. Does the water still need looking after? Perhaps I'd better shut that off. And what about electric light?"

"Oh!" cried Betty softly, sinking down on the lower step of the stairs, "you'll use all your money up!"

"Not all," said Marjorie, happily, "that's what money is for, isn't it? To be used up?"

"Well, I wouldn't, anyway," said Betty, "I can earnestly believe you."

"What did you think I was, a spirit?" Here, write those addresses quick, I want to get things started and get back to baby."

Betty wrote, after a little note book and pencil from her handbag. "I can't be sorry you ever came near us," said Betty sadly, "having to spend all this money and you all your own."

"I'm already glad I came," said Marjorie, "and if Mother and Father get well, and you don't get sick, I'll say I'm having the time of my life. You know we're pretty happy to be able to help and I only wish I'd known before that you had all this suffering. And me with plenty!"

Then although she was almost choking with tears, she gave a bright smile and hurried away on her errands.

She took herself to the drugstore where there was a telephone booth and did the doctor, the coal, the gas, and electric light by telephone, and her crisp young voice, accustomed as it was to giving orders that were always carried out promptly, brought cooperation in every case. Within nine minutes after she entered Marjorie had all the bill was promised full payment of the bill was promised and the agent would call.

Then the groceries arrived and filled the kitchen with their stores.

In the midst of it Betty came down with crying eyes of astonishment at all the magic that had been wrought.

The child was partly gone from the house by this time, and Marjorie had sent off her fare coat and her smart little felt hat, and hung them in the hall closet empty like that closet.

"Now!" she said, "I'm ready for work! Where do I put these things? Are there any special places for them or do I park them wherever I like?"

"Wherever you like!" said Betty throwing open the little pantry door and displaying a vista of empty shelves.

"And there comes the coal!" said Marjorie. "You'll have to tell them where to put that!"

Marjorie enjoyed putting away the things.

Betty came up from the cellar and looked at her.

"Well," she said in her sharp voice that had a snapping note of irony in its quality, "I suppose you must be pretty wonderful, and I'm sure grateful."

"Nothing wonderful about it! I'm just ordinary sister Marjorie. And I'm mighty happy to be taken in and made one of you!"

"Well, I should say you'd taken us in, if you asked me! I thought we'd reached the limit and couldn't would be so all well on our way out of here, but you've somehow brought us back again where we have to go on." Suddenly Betty drooped down on her bag by the kitchen door and rained her head down in her hands and burst into tears. Marjorie was worn out.

No Good

Little Betty was dressed in a bathing suit and was taken in to the water for the first time. Soon her voice was heard:

"Mother, is this supposed to be bathing or dry, 'cause it isn't a bit."

By G. L. Strange, Member The Board of Commerce

A great deal is being said these days, and rightly so too, about the serious problem facing Canada in not being able to sell anything like all the wheat we are producing.

The Government is being pressed to adopt methods which will tend to enlarge foreign markets.

It is quite apparent, therefore, that the competition to sell Canadian wheat on world markets will be better than ever during the next few years. Every Western farmer, however, can himself give substantial assistance in helping to sell Canadian wheat on world markets. This he can do by the simple method of producing a crop of the highest quality.

There is no better method known of doing this than to sow a few bushels of the best seed obtainable, of a recommended variety, on a few acres of summerfallowed land. Registered seed is preferable but if not obtainable, of course, the very best quality seed.

If every farmer were to do this simple and inexpensive thing there is certain that the average quality of Canadian wheat for export would be improved, foreign sales would be better assured, our surplus would decrease, and so prices would rise. Countless all farmers and all the rest of us would substantially benefit.

Following the drought, and tended to raise price: Broomhall increases estimated importers wheat requirements—European crop conditions mostly below normal— Australian shipments to mainland Europe small demand—U.S. Pacific and Atlantic coast markets unchanged—Winnipeg stock—Daily lowers import duty on—Peruvian rice crop prospects poor.

Following factors have tended to lower price: Increase of Argentine exports, 1938-39, world wheat estimate much larger than year ago—Slight increase in official Indian wheat acreage estimate—Widespread rains mean? Indian crop recovery— Floating wheat stocks increase—Rains and snows improve Italian winter prospects—European political situation clearing.

No Telling When Train Will Pass, Caution Safest Rule

"Did not anticipate any railway traffic at this point." These words sum up the reason for a recent collision of a delivery truck with a Canadian National freight train on a Nova Scotia town. There were no casualties, but considerable damage to the truck probably due to the quick action of the locomotive driver and a brakeman in stopping the train.

Numerous accidents where motor vehicles and trains collide every year, beyond have been caused by motor vehicle drivers, particularly in hazardous places where they can see when the times of regular trains, obviously by being entirely forgetful of the fact that extra trains are operated by railways and that these are liable to come along at any hour of the day or night. The safe thing for the driver of any motor vehicle is to go to be always on the alert when approaching railway crossings and make sure no train is approaching from either direction before proceeding to cross the tracks, according to well-officials.

CANADIAN NATIONAL

Agnes McPhail M.P. in House of Commons

I feel that we can do more immediately by encouraging the production of a great many of our other problems in Canada by restoring the purchasing power of the farmer than we can do by any other method. In Canada we have some 732,000 farms, and it is true of almost every farm family that they consume how its goods they need; and we have idle machines, unemployed workers, and a drift of rural youth to the cities and into white-collared jobs and into the professions, if that is possible.

Agriculture until now has been subsidized by keep in a protected market, and not only a protected market but a market restricted in many ways, and all to a non-protected market. I am sure no other industry pressing through such times as agriculture is experiencing would have been asked to pay such high prices for the goods and services which they require and the high prices which they had to pay were very largely the result of the regulating of supply to meet effective demand. And yet the farmer or, become he had this seeming overhead, went on producing more and more products to meet effective demand for his goods.

Farmers have been asked to pay high interest rates. Even the farm mortgage has been profitable to the rate as it is, but it could be so much better—[illegible] to send practically all demand—U.S. Pacific and Atlantic coast markets unchanged—Winnipeg stock—Daily lowers import duty on—Peruvian rice crop prospects poor.

Following factors have tended to lower price: Increase of Argentine exports, 1938-39, world wheat estimate much larger than year ago—Slight increase in official Indian wheat acreage estimate—Widespread rains mean? Indian crop recovery— Floating wheat stocks increase—Rains and snows improve Italian winter prospects—European political situation clearing.

Everything Must Be Done About It

Now that the rebuilding that must be done, and the only thing that the farmer can do for himself, is to organize agriculture so completely that there will be one body that can speak for agriculture.

I hear farmers talking for the first time in favor of producing for a known market. They see that other countries which used to buy our farm products are not do so any longer. They regret that there are people in Canada who would like to buy cream and eggs, steaks, cereals, chickens—all the things that go to make up a good table—but who cannot afford them. The farmer is coming to realize the meaning of these great surpluses, and although he would like to see them consumed by people in urban places and the people who are to be found sometimes in country places, he cannot afford to produce for nothing. He cannot afford to give the goods to the people who need them. So for the first time in his life the Ontario farmer, and I think Canadian farmer, is thinking. The farmer is coming to the conclusion that what he must do is produce goods for a known market; that is, to estimate how much the market will absorb and the farmer of Ontario, feels that produce that much and no more.

BUTTER—

MANY AN ORATOR at the Variety Theatre, Tofield, and elsewhere on this continent has, during the past ten or fifteen years unctuously heaped praise on the heads of the Finnish nation as being the only European nation to pay their war debts to the United States of America. The fact that the Finnish nation had no war debts to pay, made little difference. It was a good story anyway, and made the orator and perhaps the audience feel good at this example of national integrity. Payments have been made to the United States by Finland during the past few years, but they were not war debts but ordinary international debts contracted in pre-war days.

But if by any chance Finland has lost any of the notice bestowed upon her by people of this district by reason of having no war debts, she has more than made up for it by her rapid strides in importance in the dairy industry, as according to latest figures 17,000 tons of butter were exported from Finland during 1938. This is quite a pat of butter in any man's country and is all the more remarkable because few people, even in Great Britain, where about half of the Finnish butter is eaten, associate Finland with a large butter making country.

It is some fifty years since Finnish butter first began to find its way to Great Britain in any quantity, and since that time there has been a steady increase in the number of creameries until to-day there are well over 500 plants making butter there. There are large areas devoted to dairy manufacture. Finland has an area of only 125,784 square miles and a population of less than half that of Canada. The country is dotted with lakes and is inclined to be mountainous, half of which go to make Finland's advance into an industry usually associated with pastoral countries all the more remarkable.

At first the creameries in Finland were private, by owned, but in 1901 a gradual change from privately owned creameries to co-operatively owned was commenced. By the end of 1927 the number of dairies under co-operative control had reached 88 per cent of all the dairies in the country. There they now and have had for some years, a Butter Export Association named Valio, which markets "Select." At the Central Control Station butter is classed into three grades and while in 1913 only 58 per cent of all butter received was found to be of first grade quality, to-day the percentage is 95 per cent. As in Alberta, Finnish dairy farmers are paid on a fat percentage basis and are urged to exercise every incentive to hygienic cleanliness. In fact through the whole dairy industry there is an ever present tension working towards more economical and hygienic methods of production and more improved methods of manufacture and storage. The butter is conveyed to steamers in the Co-operative Association's own trucks which are fitted with heating and refrigerating systems and thermometers so that the temperature of the butter is known at all times. By an ingenious system of markings it is possible to tell from which one of the many small creameries any particular box of butter originated. First class butter only, is exported and intermittently without warning, casks of butter from each dairy are examined by government authorities. Dairies unwilling to submit to this system of inspection cannot export butter. On board ship butter is stored in holds in which recording thermometers have been installed and officials of the government regularly inspect the thermometers upon the ship's return to the Finnish port.

THE GAME'S THE THING—

THIS WEEK SEES the Tofield Annual Mixed Bonspiel in full swing. There are sixteen rinks entered, which of course means sixty-four players starting off with hopes of "being in the silver" as the cliche. That there will be winners and losers, and more losers than winners, goes without saying, but that is just part of the game and lends enchantment to it. While curling as a skilled sport is rather a serious affair and demands its own peculiar type of organization, financial and otherwise, it is really a splendid thing that there is a building large enough and with sufficient sheets of ice to make a general mixed spiel possible.

With the influx of such a large number of immature curlers, many without rocks or brooms, there is bound to be some confusion which will require courtesy, tact and patience on the part of regular club members, to straighten out. But above all things stands the game itself. A rink may win or lose, incidents may be pleasant or unpleasant and lady luck may be with a person or against. But wine CAN be accepted modestly, losses CAN be accepted gracefully and a little banter, like spice to a pudding CAN be added without spoiling the whole. In a game steeped with tradition, persons come and go, but the game itself goes on. It is in this spirit that we wish the 1939 mixed bonspiel "a happy ending."

Registered and Certified Seed For Distribution

Ample stocks of registered and certified seed wheat, oats and barley for distribution to grain growers at reduced prices and cheaper rates are available in the province, it was stated by Provincial Department of Agriculture officials today. Because of prevailing low prices and the interest shown by growers in the various distribution arrangements, it is anticipated that the area sown to improved seed in 1939 will be greater than in any previous year.

Three separate pointers are in effect. By availing themselves of any or all of them, growers will be enabled to sow improved seed in the certain knowledge that they will reap an increased yield of better quality grain which will help retain for Alberta the high position now held in the export market.

The pointers are:

1. Bulk sales direct from the bins of registered growers at a reduced cost per bushel.

2. Each sales of registered or certified seed graded by the Dominion Plant Products Production Service.

3 Seed exchange, by which a grower of pure seed of one variety of cereal may obtain shipments of seed of another variety for feed or grain purchases or straight purchase basis. A premium of 1½ cents per bushel is also given on seed grain exchanged under this policy. Reduced freight rates on seed grain moved in carlots under any of these policies will be effective up to March 15, 1939.

All seed distributed under the bulk sales arrangement has been threshed from fields known to be free of noxious weeds. Cleaned to the grades and standards set out by The Seed Act, in conformance in all requirements of purity and quality.

The seed is being shipped directly from the grower's bin, there are no charges for cartage and storage. Due to the available to purchasers at greatly reduced cost. The crops harvested, are in the main free from smutted and rusted varieties of seed.

Under terms of the exchange policy, growers are reminded that application must be made through a central nursery setting for a group of growers. Peter Lund, who is in charge of elevator agents and municipal secretaries, and no time should be lost in making application for the number of nurse available for this service is strictly limited.

Nested Eggs — A Sardine Surprise

For breakfast or luncheon or children's suppers this is an unusual and interesting dish.

Eggs lend themselves to a great many tempting ways, and yet we take them so much for granted. Asked for different ways to serve them, you might say poached, fried, boiled and hard-cooked and think you had covered the situation, but that's only the beginning. For instance, here's a dish that doesn't take much time to prepare, but pays dividends in good taste and appetite appeal.

Instead Eggs With Sardines

4 slices toast

1 can Canadian Sardines

4 eggs, separated

Have the toast piping hot and butter it well. Place two sardines on each piece of toast. Drop a whole yolk into the depression made in the white on each piece of toast. Add a dot of butter to each. Dust with salt, pepper, and paprika and set into a moderate oven until the eggs are set and cooked.

Canadian sardines come packed with mustard or tomato sauce as well as in oil. This dish becomes different each time, for instance, for children's luncheon use the sardines packed in tomato sauce, and spread a little of the tomato sauce on top of the egg white after the whole yolk has been placed in the centre. For those who like cheesy flavours, pick the sardines packed in mustard.

Sections of canned kippered herring —they come packed that way—may be substituted for the sardines.

Canned Canadian salmon, mashed and sprinkled with a little lemon juice make another interesting variation.

Don't forget any woman may have a whole cookbook on exciting fish recipes merely for the asking. Just send a postal card to the Department of Fisheries, Ottawa, Canada, and they will send you a copy of "100 Tempting Fish Recipes." Published in both French and English and free to every Canadian woman.

Seek Reductions In Car Licenses

Reduction of motor car licenses in this province is again being brought to the forefront and is expected to be advocated at the session of the legislature which opened on February 9.

A resolution calling for a cut in motor car licenses was submitted to the provincial Social Credit convention held recently in Edmonton. It was among the 41 which were for further action on the part of the board of management.

Opposition in this resolution was that license fees should be reduced to the normal rate and that the loss in revenue should be made up by an increase in the gasoline tax.

In view of demands expressed at various gatherings, it is expected that the government will give consideration to the question of granting a reduction in license fees, particularly in view of the large sum extracted annually from Alberta motorists in gasoline tax and motor licenses for revenue purposes.

In the United States, the trend toward reduction of motor car licenses is gaining ground. Bills calling for reductions have been introduced in Arizona, Arkansas, Idaho, Illinois, Nebraska, Kentucky, North Carolina, New York, Oklahoma and Tennessee. Many of the measures provide that fees, ranging from $3 to $5 for passenger cars.

Reduction of motor car licenses in this province has been urged upon the provincial government by the Alberta Motor Association.

Pail Feeding Of Calves

(Experimental Farms News)

Perhaps there is no "easy" way to launch a young calf to drink but bunching the calf in a corner and holding its head down with the nose at the surface of the milk is probably as good a method as any, states E. Van Nice, Assistant in Live Stock, Dominion Experimental Station, Scott, Sask.

Nifed Cut Chop —2 pounds

Fine Corn Meal—2 pounds

Ground Flax Seed—1 pound

In some home-made models wheat middlings have been used in place of the oat chop but these have not been tested at Scott. One part of the home-made calf meal mixture may be used in eight or nine parts of warm skim-milk to make and fed in the pail as milk. The quantity of meal fed should be stepped up gradually as the calf grows older. Skim-milk should not develop as good a calf as if the same milk were taken from the pail by the calf at will. Skim-milk contains practically all the bone and tissue building material found in a well started calf may be grown without milk.

Whole oats and the best hay available should be provided at an early stage so that the calf may learn to eat them at any age should be made very gradually and all containers kept clean.

Men's Dominion Ski Championships at Fort William

The best skiers of Canada will meet stiff international competition when the Men's Dominion Ski Championships are contested at Fort William Ont., from February 24 to 26.

The Lakehead city has every-thing in its favor in its efforts to sponsor the most successful Dominion championships in the history of the sport in Canada. Not only is the terrain suitable for a meet of such high calibre, but skiing this year has reached a new peak of popularity and enthusiasm in Fort William is intense.

The contests will be held on Mount McKay, towering more than 1,000 feet above the city. Many trails have been cut on the forested northern slopes where in most ideal conditions Dominion ski championships are contested in Fort William Ont., from February 24 to 26.

The 4,700-foot downhill run from the top of Mount McKay is a descent of more than 1,000 feet in less than a mile and provides thrills aplenty for contestants as well as spectators. There is a 40-metre F.I.S. standard jump and a 50-foot slalom course where the continent's ski stars will compete.

The mountain, which is within easy reach of the city, has many nursery and practice slopes in addition to more than 25 miles of mountain bush trails. Canada's only electrically operated ski tow will be in operation over the clubhouse in a 500-foot level. The tow will transport skiers who have become tired of climbing to the clubhouse on

We have received word that the girls at Hastings Lake have taken up hockey. Surely they don't take the game as serious as this?

Time was quite well spent,
Then I went to see a game
I'm sorry now I went.

They would be bested in a score

One of the others heard what I said
And then the trouble began,
They all came at me with a rush,

They forgot the rush, they forgot the game,
They took it out on me,
It took a score of men or more,

REVELSTOKE, B.C., Feb. 15 — Two brothers met Tuesday for the first time in nearly 50 years when Tom McRae, Yukon sourdough stepped off the train at the C.P.R. station here.

Tom left the McRae home in Glengarry, nearly half a century ago, with his fortune in the west and went to the Yukon with the rush. Now after striking it rich in the territory he is on the verge of retirement.

Although the assembled trustees were favorable to these subjects being taught they were confined to vote for the matter to the ratepayers for discussion. Another meeting will be held on March 3rd, when the matter will come up for further discussion.

It is stated that these subjects could be handled either by a travelling teacher, or by a resident teacher

Yearly Subsidy To West Agriculture Urged By Bracken

SASKATOON, Feb 15— "If we can afford to subsidize manufacturing to the extent of $47,000,000 a year, through tariff protection, then we can afford to subsidize western agriculture to the extent of $25,000,000 a year through the wheat board," the Hon. John Bracken, premier of Manitoba and a former resident of Saskatoon declared in an address before the Saskatoon Canadian Club here last night.

"There are some people in the east who say that we cannot afford to pay $50,000,000 a year to help the western farmer, but I say that as long as we can afford to subsidize the manufacturers in Canada to the extent of $47,000,000, which we have been doing for many years, we can continue the wheat board," Mr. Bracken stated, after recalling that last year was the first year the wheat board had been in force.

The economic problems confronting the Canadian west, said Mr. Bracken, while extremely serious were not insurmountable. To remedy them, however, the nation and marshal its best brains, and prepare for a struggle.

He had been inspired, he said, and given courage, when he had seen men of widely divergent points of view sit down together, and agree on exchanging their differences in order to find a solution for their common problems.

This, he said, was what he had witnessed earlier in the day, during a session of the western committee on markets and agricultural readjustment.

Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn, of Ontario, Premier Maurice Duplessis of Quebec, George McCullagh, publisher of the Toronto Globe and Mail, and Hon. Gordon Conant, attorney-General of Ontario, Mr. Bracken said, were four eastern leaders who had expressed opposition to the wheat board.

"We must make it known to the people all over the country," Mr. Bracken stated, "that if they are not going to help us with their moral support situation, we cannot meet our obligations. That is a plain statement of fact."

Famous Fur Firm Purchases Plane

Hudson's Bay company has purchased a twin-engined Beechcraft airplane for operation in the northern B.C. and western Arctic areas this spring as part of a program embracing modernization of all transport facilities, it was announced Wednesday in Winnipeg. The airplane will be based in Edmonton.

Brushing out of the company into the air transport field was forecast in Edmonton late last fall, it was recalled here. Company officials explained Wednesday the airplane was playing an increasingly important part in fur trade and other operations. Edmonton has been the base for several long round-trips by air to company posts in the north in recent years.

The new machine will be piloted by Elmer Gatty, Canadian airman and co-pilot of Edmonton Journal's round-the-world flight in 1931. Gatty left Edmonton the past year and returned of 10 years' absence in many parts of Canada, the company announced. Pilot Wilson left here Wednesday he was expecting to leave CAL. around the end of March to take over his new post.

Order Every German Worker To Serve State When Needed

BERLIN, Feb. 15— Field Marshal Goering Wednesday empowered the labor office and its sub-departments throughout Germany to draft every worker who might be needed to perform tasks deemed urgent and of importance to the welfare of the state.

Every inhabitant of Germany, former citizens excepted, may be drafted for whatever form of labor Goering, as dictator of the four-year plan for economic self-sufficiency, deems necessary

Men or women holding jobs must be given a leave of absence immediately by their employers when drafted.

If a task prescribed by the labor office or under Goering's instructions is of indefinite duration, the person drafted is regarded as having resigned his former position.

But if he is drafted only for a stated period, the employer must take him back whenever the labor office's special requirement is filled.

Cornhill Ratepayers' Annual Meeting

On Saturday, February 18th, the annual meeting of the ratepayers of Municipal District of Cornhill was held. The attendance while not large, was up to the average of previous annual meetings. In the early hours of Saturday morning, a very heavy snow fall occurred in the district which completely blocked the side roads and made travelling even on the highway tough going. Reeve Glenn was compelled to walk most of the way in, but made it in plenty of time, while others came partly by walking, partly by team and partly by car. If it had not been for the heavy snow fall the attendance would undoubtedly have been much larger. In addition to the reeve, Councillors Morden and Walker were present, while Councillors Anderson, Holmberg and Swabey were completely snowed in, and thus were prevented from attending. The acting secretary, J. Letourneau, was also present.

Returning officer, A. C. Dodds opened the meeting with a few appropriate remarks, stating that this was the ratepayers own meeting called to discuss municipal matters and to receive nominations for Councillor for the ensuing one and two. The retiring councillors for these divisions were present also, Councillor Glenn, and Councillor Morden. Mr. Dodds suggested that the meeting appoint a chairman and secretary.

Mr. T. R. Murray was nominated Mr. E. A. Moen and Mr. A. Patterson were delegated to attend the meeting held in Ryley Monday of last week as [illegible] as chairman. He replied that as he might wish to take part in some of the discussions, he would prefer someone else be elected. He was, however, persuaded again to accept the position which he did, and suitably thanked the assembly for the honor. As W. Worton was present with pen and paper handy, he was asked to act as secretary, which he agreed to do.

The chairman briefly stated the purpose of the meeting and suggested the ratepayers take advantage of the opportunity for the discussion of municipal affairs. No meeting attended them.

Mr. Abernethy:—Mr. Glenn stated at the last annual ratepayers meeting that the covered hall authority from the Department of Municipal Affairs to use trust funds. I would like to know when that authority was given.

Mr. Glenn:—The council did not have any written instructions.

At this point Mr. George Abernethy spoke regarding to postponing the meeting to a more suitable date so as to allow more people to attend. The chairman said it was entirely a matter for the meeting to decide, providing all present were willing to be bored to, but pointed out that while the snow storm undoubtedly had kept many away, the attendance was not equal to an average annual meeting attendance. After a short discussion it was decided to proceed with the meeting.

Mr. W. Abernethy:—What has the secretary cost the municipality? Can anyone say what the secretary receives for any one year?

Mr. Glenn:—The secretary received $2000.00 for his services and the assistant.

Mr. Geo. Abernethy:—What about consolidation?

Mr. Glenn:—The secretary receives $1.00 for each consolidation.

Mr. G. Abernethy:—Who pays the $1.00, the ratepayer or the council?

Mr. Glenn:—The ratepayer.

Mr. G. Abernethy: Under what section? (Continued on page three)

SYNOPSIS

When the wealthy, feisty parents of Marjorie Wetherill both die she finds a letter telling that she has a twin sister, that she was adopted when her own parents couldn't afford to support both of them and that her real name is Dorothy Gay. Alone in the world, but with a fortune of her own, she meanders looking up her family whom she has never seen. A neighbor, Evan Bowes, tries to argue her out of it and tells her he loves Fay and asks her to marry him. She promises to think it over but decides first to see Fay's family. She finds their conditions shabby, that they are content with what small income furnishes, but that her father has no job. Her sister treats her like an enemy and resents her offer to help, but finally, after many explanations, agrees to take money to buy coal and food in order to save her mother's life. Marjorie goes out and buys food, coal and other supplies which are joyously welcomed by her sister. Her father comes in sick and hungry but hurries to the cellar to build a fire and get the house warm.

Marjorie was at her side at once, her arms about her, soothing her, patting the hair back from her tired forehead, putting a warm kiss on the back of her neck.

"Why, you've cold yet, you poor dear!" she said. "Come into the hall and stand by the register and get your feet warm."

"No! No, I'm all right," insisted Betty, raising her head and brushing away her tears. "I just can't endure to stand it all, everything getting so different all of a sudden. Food in the house, and heat, and a chance to sit down."

"But you dear, you mustn't worry about a thing. Come let me get you a nice little lunch."

Marjorie made Betty sit down and ate.

"Mother said the soup was the best thing she had tasted in weeks," she said as she ate heartily.

"Have you—told her about me—yet?" asked Marjorie cautiously.

"No," said Betty miserably. "I didn't have written me a chance yet. I didn't want to excite her while she was eating. And besides Father had come in and dropped down on the other edge of the bed. He went right off to sleep.

"You spoke of Ted. Is he our brother?" Marjorie asked.

"Of course. Hadn't you heard of him, Hite? He's almost seventeen, and he's a dear. I don't know what we would have done while father was sick, if it hadn't been for Ted. He worked early and late just like a man. He's out now hunting for some kind of a job. And he hasn't had much to eat for a day and a half. He had a real desperate mean on his face when he went away this morning. I wish he would come back and get something to eat. But he won't come until he finds something."

"Oh," said Marjorie, "couldn't I go out and find him?"

Betty's eyes filled with tears, but she smiled through them, and shook her head.

"I wouldn't know where to find Ted. He goes all over the city when he gets desperate. He'll come pretty soon perhaps, because he said if he couldn't find something else this morning he'd come back and get that chair and take it to the pawnbroker. He felt we ought to have some coal as soon as possible, but he hated to give up the last chair."

"Oh, my dear!" said Marjorie, her eyes clouded with tears of sympathy. "Oh, if I had only known sooner!"

"Oh, don't you cry!" said Betty. "You've come, and I can't tell you how wonderful it is just to know it's warm here again and have something to eat, and not be frightened about Mother and Father I'm sure I'll love you afterwards for yourself, but just now I can't help being thankful for the things you've done! Maybe I can make you understand sometime, when I'm not so tired. But you see I've leaned you and blamed you for being better than we are for so long! I can't make it vanish to you. You couldn't help what they did to you when you were a baby of course. Only I never dreamed they wouldn't tell you anything about us. Mother and Mrs. Westcroft had said they would tell you you were adopted, and I supposed of course you knew, and didn't care to have anything to do with us."

"I don't think Mrs. Westcroft knew much about you either," said Marjorie, thoughtfully. "Not till Mother came to see her. And she never told me about that at all. She just left a letter."

"I see," said Betty sadly, "I was all wrong of course. But I guess that was what made Mother suffer so, thinking she had let you go. She has cried and cried over that. Whenever she wasn't well, she would cry all night. She said Mr. Wetherill came to her when she was weak and sick and didn't fully realize what she was doing. Father was the gentleman with [illegible] and Mr. Wetherill promised to put him on a farm and start him out. Besides he gave them quite a sum of money to have me trained. It seems as if it wasn't very strong and had to be under a specialist for a long time. They said I wouldn't live if I didn't have special treatment."

Betty's eyes grew stormy with indignation.

"I need to wish sometimes they had let me die. I thought Mother didn't love me at all, she mourned for you so much."

"Oh, my dear!" said Marjorie coming closer and putting her arms about her sister "My dear! I think we are going to love each other a lot!"

It was very still in the little dreary kitchen for a minute while the two sisters held each other close. Then Betty lifted her head.

"I'm glad you've come, anyway!" she said, "even if you were wonderful! Ready. And I'm glad for Mother that she needn't fret for what she did any more. As soon as the doctor's been here I want to tell her. It will cure her just to know you're with us. I mean it will."

"Well, you'd better not the doctor if it won't excite her too much. There! Isn't that the doorbell? Perhaps he's come! But it isn't time, he wouldn't—"

Betty hurried to answer the bell, and Marjorie followed in the kitchen saw through the crack of the door that it was the doctor. Betty took him upstairs at once, and Marjorie began for a minute by the kitchen window looking out.

Then she remembered the pantry which she had been putting to rights, setting the supper up in an orderly manner on the shelves.

She stopped at last to reach the top shelf, and there she discovered a handless cracked cup with little chicken in it. Where had this thing come from? She wiped off the shelf, and stepped down with the cup in her hand, and stood examining the bits of paper. Each one had something written on it.

"His plain sterling spoons," one read, "and his initialed napkins, and silver—"

Then she stood studying them, trying to make a rough estimate of the total amount loaned for all those articles, when suddenly she heard the kitchen door open and turned on his feet when he went away this morning. I wish he would come back and get something to eat. But he won't come until he finds something."

"What's the idea, Betts, of having the cellar window open? Do you want to think it was milder out than in?"

Marjorie turned startled, seeing the form which fell into the cup, and facing him, not realizing that the well laid in the cup in her hand.

She saw a tall boy, lean and wiry, with a shock of red hair and big gray eyes that had green lights in them.

He stared at her first with a bewildered gaze like one who had come in out of the sun and could not rightly see in the dimmer light.

"You are Ted, aren't you?" He stiffened visibly, realizing that he was in the presence of a stranger.

"Yes?" he said coldly, ready to resent the intrusion of a stranger into their private misery.

Then he saw the cup in her hand, and putting down the bucket of coal he had picked from the dump he stepped over and took the cup possessively.

"That wouldn't interest you," he said coldly, coprocisely.

"Ted!" said Marjorie impulsively, "I'm your sister don't speak to me that way!"

"My sister!" said Ted scornfully. "What I can't help is if you are, that doesn't give you a right to pry into my private affairs, does it?"

An angry flush had risen over the boy's lean cheeks and his eyes were hard as steel.

"Oh, please don't!" said Marjorie covering her face with her hands. "I wasn't prying I was trying to help!"

"Well, we don't need your help!" said the boy with young scorn in his eyes.

"But you see, Ted, I'm not a visitor. I'm one of the family, and Betty said I are working together."

"Betty! Does my sister Betty know you are here? Where is she?"

"She's upstairs now with the doctor."

"The doctor! Is my mother worse?"

"I don't know. I haven't seen her yet, but as soon as I heard she was so sick I hopped Betty to get the doctor. You know pneumonia is a very treacherous disease."

"Yes, and who did you think would pay the doctor?" asked Ted in that hard cold young voice so full of anxiety and belligerence.

"Oh, Ted! I'll pay, of course!"

"Yes, and what do you think Mr. Wetherill will say to that?"

"He hasn't any anything. Ted file's dead!" There was a bit of a sob in Marjorie voice in spite of her best efforts.

The boy looked at her speculatively and coldly.

"If you are family why didn't you come before when Mother was fretting for you?"

"Because I didn't know anything about her or any of you except that you had let me be adopted!"

The hardness in the boys face relaxed.

Then they heard the doctor coming downstairs, with Betty just behind him, and by common consent they became silent. Marjorie met with a hand at her throat to still the wild throbbing of her pulses. Then they heard the doctor say:

"No, I can't expect her fever to go down before the crisis, perhaps a little more all she needs is rest and nourishment and good care. Be careful about the temperature of the room. Of course don't let her get cold. Marjorie has a comfortable looking stove in there. Is that the only one you have?"

"Yes, sir," said Betty, "but I've been using extra coal to keep it going."

"Well, then, tell her about it by and by, when she's better. Perhaps you'd better wait till she wakes up."

When the door closed behind the doctor Marjorie met a sudden shock of her own as if she wanted to sit down and cry with relief.

Betty's face was eager as she came out into the kitchen. She looked straight at Marjorie. Perhaps she didn't see Ted at first.

"The doctor says she won't have pneumonia after all," she said with relief.

"Oh, Ted, you've got back. I've been so worried! You went off without your breakfast and you had one dinner last night!"

"Aw, shucks! Do you think I can't do without it?" said Ted

"I've been heating the soup but for Ted," said Betty, "Hite's had it. Ted! She placed a bowl on the table before him, and a spoon. "There's coffee too, and a plate of sandwiches." She set the things before him.

"Gosh!" said Ted dumbfounded, looking at the food, and then himself."

"You don't know what's happened since you left, Theodore Gay! A letter from your uncle, Uncle Hal, and—"

Betty. "We've got another sister, Ted! Isn't it wonderful? She—she did it all!"

"Huh!" said Ted, straightening his nice mahogany brows, "but I don't think we ought to take it."

"Well," said Betty, thought so too, but I found out it was a choice between that, and dying, and she seemed determined to die with us if we did, so I let her have her way."

Marjorie felt a sudden lump coming into her throat that reobscured her vision, and her head. She felt so glad to have got here in time before her family starved to death! How awful it would have been in such straits while she fussed on the fat of the land!

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By R. G. L. Strange, Director "The Crop Trading Plan."

The continuation of the present 30 cent per bushel guarantee for wheat, on a basis of 1 Northern Fort William, is the recommendation finally made by the Conference of the Dominion Government.

The Conference also requested the Government to consider the problem of those farmers who sold coarse grains, and the additional problem of those producers who at times suffer not from small or no yields.

Two objections have been raised in Eastern Canada to the present 30 cent guarantee. First that it will tend to an increase in wheat acreage. It has been shown, however, that 23 cents Fort William is still definitely below the cost of production, and therefore would hardly induce farmers to increase acreage.

Secondly that 30 million dollars would be the cost of the guarantee is a lot of money. I draw attention, however, to the fact that the farmers of the West have been paying for many years a bonus, in the form of tariff protection of between 40 and 50 million dollars each year, to the manufacturers, mainly in the East.

It is not, therefore, I suppose, unfair for Western farmers, in their hour of extreme need, to ask for some compensation for the bonus they have paid to industry for so many years past.

Following factors have tended to depress prices: Increased acreage in the time wheat—French return to extensive damage in Belgium—Russian Russian trade experts to Britain hindered by suspension of free currency Canadian Pacific Railway Company continued wet weather delays reseeding in Prairie Provinces—1930 Chinese crop exports.

Following factors have tended to raise prices: Continued cold wet weather in April, particularly during years of most rapid growth, will supply the reserved calories, as well as appreciable amounts of protein, vitamins and other growth-promoting factors A pint of milk daily is beneficial to adults, not merely for its calories contributions but for its proportion of protein, fat, minerals, vitamins, and high quality protein content. It ranks first among milk products because it furnishes more of the essentials of the diet than any other food. In other words, no other food can be substituted for it. To bulletin, which may be obtained free on application from the Publicity and Extension Division, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, deals n a concise manner with the most important facts, such as the value of milk in the diet, milk in various forms, care of milk from producer to consumer, consumption and uses of milk, together with many recipes for soups and chowders, junket, cream puffs, cocoa, custards, milk drinks and milk dishes for convalescents.

Experts Name Milk The Food of Foods

In view of the millions of gallons of milk produced in Canada every year, it is interesting to note that the consumption of milk in the Dominion is only about two-thirds of a pint per person. This is the bulletin with Milk—"The Food of Foods," issued by the Dominion Department of Agriculture. This is partially explained by the fact that many people may not thoroughly appreciate the important role this really indispensable food plays in sustaining the body. The present per capita consumption is much lower than that recommended by nutrition authorities, and is considerably less than the amount which would be found in a study of nutrition

The Economic Commission of the Health Committee of the League of Nations recommends the daily use of 750 grams (about 1½ pounds or a third pint) for children 1 to 2 years of age, and 1,000 grams (about a pint and four fifths pint) for children up to 14 years of age. The Commission also emphasizes the fact that milk should form a conspicuous element of the diet at all ages.

Milk is the best foundation on which to build meals for both children and adults. A daily allowance of a pint and a half is one quart for each child, particularly during years of most rapid growth, will supply the required calories, as well as appreciable amounts of protein, vitamins and other growth-promoting factors A pint of milk daily is beneficial to tion of the road was this allowance made?

Mr. Glenn:—There is nothing covering this in the act. Due to the extra secretarial work connected with municipalities a resolution was passed in council allowing the secretary $1.00 per municipality.

A general discussion arose here as to the public and private business of the secretary which brought forth a statement from the chairman that the ratepayers had no right to inquire into the private business of the secretary, and that he, the chairman, intended to look after the municipal prosperity and personalities excluded.

Mr. Cox thoroughly disagreed as to what was the secretary's private and public business, saying that the secretary was paid for a full time position and the ratepayers were entitled to know what other employment, if any, he was engaged in connection with work done in the office.

Mr. A. J. Harrison said some time ago he had been quite a long chat with the secretary in which he had stated to the secretary, "it was just too bad the ratepayers had not demanded an independent audit." Mr. Harrison went on and touched upon the oil purchase affair.

The question of an independent audit was discussed at some length and it was:

Moved by W. McGinlie, seconded by C.W. Fay, that an independent audit be made by the incoming council for an independent audit for the years 1926—1927 and 1928. Motion carried.

Regarding the matter of oil, Mr. Glenn stated that it had been decided by council to split the oil business between the firms of Hall (Mr. Hall) and Maple Leaf (Mr. Kennedy). Previously the oil purchases was at the discretion of the secretary, by whom division the machine was working.

Considerable discussion took place regarding the purchase of oil, during which it was stated that no agreement bound the preference of the ratepayer and the remittances to the firm were had considerable weight. It was also stated that two brands of oil in Tofield was kept in the same tank and pumped into the same pump, the

Mixed Bonspiel Real Success

Tofield: Annual mixed bonspiel finished up Tuesday night with Chapman winning the primary event and Francis winning the secondary event. There were 16 rinks entered and in the first games the winners went one way and the losers the other. Then the winners of the first games played out to eliminations and the losers of the first games the same. There were some very close games played, and with the exception of one each day, the weather being ideal, the entire bonspiel was much enjoyed by all those taking part.

You're lucky having all these players, why don't you do as some?"

Bates, Junior (Rusty)—"Nothing doing, we need 'em all. Next year we're going to try a league right at home. I guess we'll have enough to make four teams. And we're going to have two rinks too, cause one ain't enough."

George—"Gosh, I wonder if I can get my pa to move to Hastings Lake. Say, I've never been down there and seen at yore rink last Sunday? They had on time old versions and were hollerin' and jumpin' up and down."

Bates—"They ain't fussy old men sir. Just a lot of 'em we've got and they need to play a long time ago. If you want to see your own old ones see the words on their sweaters the "Aces." They chaps Minibth once said that there wasn't enough players to make a team in Hastings Lake and that some good ones would be able to say that again."

Bates—"But daddy didn't make a very good job on mine the time. He broke his pliers an' he says he needs 'em for that job. But he's gonna have a McGinley pretty soon an' I've gonna get him some more. I get 'most thirty cents now. I just gotta have a good job."

George—"I'll bet he's gettin' old sick's he?"

Bates—"I guess so. He likes to plow every day after dinner. Ya know, yesterday when he was sleepin' he said 'How do you expect me to move if ya don't gate to use on the right side.'"

George—"What did he mean?"

Bates—"I guess, I guess he's gettin' awfully old."

George—"Say, I don't believe you'll ever have two rinks."

Bates—"Sure we will too, ask some of the others then. There's Sheik Tough and Anderson, Ray, Fivel. Cases have a mistake, will ya? Isn't it right we've gonna have two rinks next year?"

Finale—"Sure it is, our daddy's are gonna make a good rink for us kids. But say, let's go, the rest of the men are waitin'—will ya'ng, Mickish."

First Place Essay

Every farmer should own a John Deere two cylinder tractor because it is economical as it burns economical distillates and low cost fuel. Not only is there a difference in the price of fuel, but distillates are more powerful as they require fewer gallons of distillate to do a given amount of work.

Great compactness is another advantage of this equipment resulting from the two cylinder engine. The cylinders are horizontal, and each receives the same charge, this insures a smooth, even power impulse. The cylinder engine is simple, sturdy and substantial, the vital parts are enclosed in the working parts in a dust proof case and gears run in a constant bath of oil.

Power is transmitted in a straight line to the rear wheels. There are no bevel gears to lose power, this is one reason why a John Deere two cylinder tractor delivers so much more power when going gets tough, and why a John Deere is light in weight.

Comparatively the slower engine speed is another characteristic of a two cylinder engine. Slower speed means longer life, as there are few overwhelming, less movement of the working parts to do a given job. This means longer life and economy.

A John Deere Tractor is easy to keep in perfect order right on the farm as there are fewer moving parts, fewer bearings are required, most adjustments can be made from a standing position.

There is nothing about the tractor that would confuse any common farmer, no mechanism to mystify him, it is easy to understand and special tools are required.

The two cylinder John Deere transmission swings which a John Deere Two Cylinder tractor assures an extraordinary when it gives us all the other things we look for in a heavy duty tractor, big capacity, economy, power, rugged strength, simplicity, ease of adjustment. Its adapted for a wide variety of uses and longer life.

Fifth Installment

IN BRIEF

When the wealthy foster parents of Marjorie Wetherell both die she finds a letter telling that she has a twin sister, that she was adopted when her own parents couldn't afford to keep part both of them and her real name is Dorothy Gay. Alone in the world, but with a fortune of her own, she considers looking up her twin family whom she has never seen. A neighbor, Ted Bentley, tries to argue her out of it but finds her be-ing her and asks her to marry him. Marjorie refuses, but thinks it over but decides first to see her family. She goes to their address finds that they are destitute. Her sister treats her like an enemy and rejects her offer of help, but finally, after many explanations, agrees to take money to buy coal and food in order to save her mother's life. Her father comes in sick and hungry but hurries to the cellar to build a fire and get the house warm. Her brother Ted comes in, is resentful of her being there at first, but when he finds all that she has done both he and Betty decide to like their new sister.

She studied her for an instant and then he said gravely:

"But we can't live off of you! It's great of you to help us out a little till we get on our feet, but we can't keep on letting you feed us. Perhaps I can get a job soon and pay you back."

The brightness went out of Marjorie's face.

"Listen, Ted, if I had lived here, and you had plenty, wouldn't you have shared it with me?"

"Of course!" said Ted crossly, "but that's different! I'm a fella!"

"Well, that's all right, Teddy dear, but it isn't different: I'm part of this family, unless you throw me out, and what's mine is yours. And seriously, I'd like to say a word about what you did to me when you first came in. You took that cup of tickets away and told me they wouldn't interest me. But they do interest me. They interest me very much. They're news tickets, aren't they? Well, what are we going to do about them, Ted? Are those Mother's things that she's fond of? Oughtn't we to go and get them?"

"They're her things. They're all the things she has. And she couldn't get new things even if she did want them. She can't get those either," he added despairingly. "I tell you it costs a lot of money."

"Tut, but how much, Ted?" persisted Marjorie.

"It isn't your responsibility," said Ted dourly. "It's mine. I pursued them."

"How look here, Ted, you just stop pushing me out of the family like that. Now you reach up to that top shelf and take down that teacup and we'll add those tickets up and see what it comes to. Please?"

Half shamedly Ted did her bidding.

They got out the tickets and Marjorie added them all up, a pitifully small sum it seemed to the girl, to represent the household goods of a home, but to the boy it seemed a breath-taking fortune.

"Is that all?" said Marjorie when he handed her the sum. "Why I can give you that right away."

"But I can't bring them till after five," said Ted. "That will be after dark, too. The neighbors are so curious. Mother hates that! Having them all find out just what we've put and what we haven't. You know we used to have a nice home over in a suburb on the other side of the city. Nice big house, built of stone. Plenty of room. We used had a room to ourselves, and there was a garage and a big garden, and flowers and fruit trees. It was a swell place. And Dad had a position with a good salary. That was before the depression, you know."

"Oh, my dear!" said Marjorie quite honestly crying now. "My dear I'm so sorry you've been going through all that!"

Well, don't bawl!" said Ted crossly, brushing his hand over his own eyes. "I can't stand bawling! I just told ya because I thought you'd watch how. We haven't always been down and out this way. We had a swell home!"

"Well, now let's make this one as cheerful as we can before evening," said Marjorie, taking a deep breath. "I'll get the money."

She went into the parlor to her handbag that she had left on the have little high mantel shelf and brought back a roll of bills that made Ted's eyes open wide.

"I put in a little extra," said his sister calmly. "I thought perhaps you'd think of something we need that I've forgotten."

"Gosh!" said Ted gazing down at the roll of bills in his hand. "Don't know's I can trust myself out alone I might get held up carrying all this wealth."

The boy grinned.

"I can see where you're going to spend my few living again when you're poor."

"Come!" said Marjorie with dismay in her voice. "Do you want me to go?"

"No, not on yer life! But you're not going to stick around these days. Not with the home you've been used to! Say!" he added irrelevantly, "you look a lot like Betty, and you don't. I could tell you apart already! You don't look quite so freshy as Betty, and you've got a cute little spark in the corners of your mouth. Maybe Betty would look like that too if she hadn't had to work so hard, and have such a lot of trouble."

"You've sweet!" said Marjorie, and suddenly reached up with a quick touch and kissed her new brother on his lean hard young cheek.

Then he turned clearly away to-ward the window and she saw him brush his hand across his eyes, and swallow hard.

"You're sor'right," he said gruffly presently.

"Thanks awfully!" said Marjorie, trying to enter into his spirit. "But who is that coming in the gate, Ted?"

"That's Bud," said Ted, peering through the smoke into the hall. "Hey, Kid! Hush up there! Dad and Mutt's asleep!"

A boy about ten came panting into the room, so out of breath he could scarcely introduce.

"They—sent me—to tell you—" he panted. "You gotta come right away an' get the hide. Bonnie's got a fever!"

"Oh!" said Ted, "I'll be right over. Tell 'em I'm coming. Don't let Bonnie cry in yellin' his head off!"

"What's that, Ted?" asked Marjorie, "Will I go?"

"No, you don't!" said Ted, "but I don't know what we'll do with 'em here, Gosh! Can you beat it?" He was quite apologetic eye at the new sister.

"What is it?" she asked puzzled. "Who are they?"

"The kids!" answered the brother not in astonishment. "Didn't you know about them?"

"No!" said Marjorie. "Oh, I remember, Betty said something when I first came about taking the children somewhere, but I had forgotten about it. I didn't realize there were more of us."

"Two besides Bud!" said Ted lifting his chin unconsciously, "and I don't know how we're going to make the grade with any more slot fulls."

Marjorie gave a little gasp of amazement and then her soft lips set firmly.

"We'll manage!" she said. "I'll go with you to get them. I can carry one of them."

Then they arrived at the neighborhood creche and Ted led the way in.

About that time back at Marjorie's home in Chicago Evan Bowne was standing at the front door inquisitively staring the doorbell.

Since he had left her, Evan Bowne had been vaguely disturbed by Marjorie's attitude, and wished he had stayed, in spite of his request that he go and let them think him gone. He should have reasoned with her right there and there

He had never considered Marjorie Wetherell inquisitive before, but now he recalled a number of times she had asked questions of her own people, that remained fanatacism.

Also, she was young, and utterly without experience in financial affairs, and here she was left alone with a fairly large fortune, and menaced by a family of unknown connection and smiling.

These thoughts had been milling about in his brain and he had come from one appointment to the other and then back to his home city, coming straight out to Wetherell's instead of going to the office first.

He walked around the house to the garage where he found the chauffeur out washing the car.

"What is the reason I cannot get any answer to my ring?" he asked pervously. He was the kind of young man who always required perfect service and usually got it.

The chauffeur looked up from his work deferentially, recognizing a friend of the family.

"Why, sir, they're all away for the holidays. Miss Wetherell went last night and gave all the servants a holiday while she is gone. Very kind of her, sir. She's always kind."

"Indeed!" said Evan Bowne as if it were somehow the chauffeur's fault.

"You don't know where she's gone? Haven't you her address?"

"No, sir, I haven't."

Evan Bowne frowned. This was really serious. What a fool he had been not to make Marjorie sit down and listen to him it's other night!

Evan Bowne got into his car and drove away in much dissatisfaction.

So! She had gone. Headstrong little girl! Impulsive! He hadn't thought she was like that. If he had replied her, and he had practically commanded her to that course, he would certainly have to train that out of her.

Marjorie had slipped nearly through his fingers and gone her own way in spite of his protests. He would try the letter carrier and post office of course, though they were not supposed to give such information. But he had office who controlled and they were to hold all mail for further orders. She had left no address.

Well, somehow he must get in touch with her.

So he went his way, and made his plans for going after Marjorie when the right moment should come, and that would be the first minute he knew where to find her.

He went out and bought a delightful Christmas gift for her. He even went so far as to look at engagement rings.

The more he thought about it the more his thoughts became intrigued with the idea of the new Marjorie and surprised. He really she could be molded in the way of womanhood which she would live if she were his wife.

Then, he reflected, Marjorie had always been fond of his company, and he knew she was not at all interested always, although until recently he had taken her out very little There were reasons enough why she should not want to marry him.

Then, it was quite the appropriate thing for him to marry her. More reasons he turned over in his mind his common sense as well as his inclination approved the plan. Only Can you blame a man for loving the girl of his choice as being utterly desirable? Even though she was rich. There had been no other man in her life, he was sure of that. He would have to worry about that, and possibly indiscretion. Innocent and lovely, that was not like was, and very likely he had been the ideal man in her eyes.

Not that he had always had one ideal of womanhood, himself; but of course we were different. It was man's part to choose, and naturally, he had considered other girls than had never been quite satisfied.

He began to think back to his church, across the aisle, a row in front of where he was sitting with his mother, and how strongly with her beauty then, and wondered that he had never seen it before.

He had watched her during its service, as she gave attention to the sermon; her great seriousness attracted him strongly.

This difference they had had the last time he had called with her, about bumping up her own people, and been put in her place because he had ever seen her make.

In the meantime his mind was making plans that definitely told that Marjorie was desirable. The more so could be influenced and guided by friend and confidante of the Wetherell family that as shamable large number of shares of very valuable stock were part of the Wetherell estate which Marjorie had inherited. Marjorie had a lot of money and needed to be advised what to do with it. And he was convinced that he was the right man.

Also, she was young, and utterly without experience in financial affairs, and here she was left alone with a fairly large fortune, and menaced by a family of unknown connection and smiling.

These thoughts had been milling about in his brain and he had come from one appointment to the other and then back to his home city, coming straight out to Wetherell's instead of going to the office first.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By R. J. Deachman, Author of "The Crop Yielding Plant."

David Rivers.

In 1926 Dr. James W. Robertson, then Commissioner for Agriculture for the Dominion Government, thought that Canadian crops could be improved, and so he donated $10,000 out of his own pocket, to encourage boys to pick out for seed the best heads of wheat and oats from the crops growing on their father's farms. The plan was a great success. The brigh, and later on their fathers, became part of a permanent organization.

From this humble beginning sprang the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, and afterwards, too, the Dominion Seed Branch; and the crops grew gained had much to do with those grain standards later set up for the Canada Grain Act.

In Canada lower the export plant breeders the make new varieties the "Canadian Seed Growers' Association," the Seeds Act, and the Canada Grain Act, all from a combination, which creates, maintains, certifies and guarantees to the buyers of the world the high quality of Canada's wheat and other grains.

Such a valuable combination could not exist in any other country; and it all sprang from the fine work of late Dr. Robertson and from the small sum of $10,000 which he donated in 1926 for the advancement of Canadian agriculture.

Following figures have tended to raise price Slight reduction in official Australian wheat crop estimate. The Orient continues to absorb a large percentage of Australian exports; fair export movement also, barley, rye and flax estimates; Crop reports in lower Volga regions unfavorable; Severe winter wheat loss in France serving to front.

Following factors have tended to lower price:- Dandelion navigation has reopened; Winter crop prospects in Hungary and the Balkans very favorable; Increase in Argentine wheat estimates; Further widespread rains in India; Brazil temporarily prohibits wheat export; Japanese 1938 rice production near 1937 level; Satisfactory moisture conditions in Africa.

SOYBEANS

(Experimental Farms News)

The fact that soybeans can be grown quite successfully in Eastern Canada and in most of the States has had many people in the western provinces to wonder if they could also be grown successfully there. Experimental Station, Lethbridge, Alta. It should be remembered that the climate of the southwestern part of Ontario, where soybeans do best in Canada, is quite different from that of the prairies. Not only is the frost free period shorter on the prairies, but the heat is also less and more unequally at night. Summer showers are very limited and cool weather requirements.

There is a wide difference in the habit of growth of varieties of soybeans, and only a few varieties can be safely recommended for growing in Canada. At the Lethbridge Experimental Station several different varieties of soybeans have been tested for the past five years. During this period the varieties, Mandarin (Ottawa), Black and Manitoba Brown ripened sufficiently each year, while a few other varieties such as Mandarin, Manchu, O.A.C. 211, and others which have been grown successfully in eastern Ontario were found to be entirely too late to ripen in southern Alberta.

Soybeans should usually be sown the first week in May, Unlike ordinary field beans, they will stand a little frost in the spring without much damage. It is, therefore, good practice to seed them early, giving them as much space as possible to ripen before fall frosts occur.

In the sugar beet growing areas of Alberta the sugar beet drill and cultivator are the best machines for seeding and cultivating soybeans, but almost these machines are not available drilling can be done with the ordinary seed drill by stopping sufficient of the rows to space the rows the desired distance apart. Alfalfa is also a high protein crop and where over it thrives soybeans are not likely to be important as a hay crop. Their chief use in such areas will be for the production of grain for feed

The vast and complex trading world has its origin in the individual trading instinct of man. The trading instinct is a fundamental. As much a fundamental as music or worship. The first "deal" of course is lost in the ages of time, but the pages of history do not record an era when man's possessions were not traded for other possessions or for what was accepted as money.

Today, amid the activities of giant business corporations individuals have not lost their trading instinct. National and international trade may go on. Large ships, mile-long trains, carry the products of gigantic factories and mills, banks and counting houses compute and calculate, but amid it all the small voice of the individual is often heard saying "For Sale," or "Wanted".

To those with things to sell and for those who desire to buy or trade articles, classified advertisements are the most economical and most effective publicity medium. Read by hundreds of people on the look-out for a trade, a classified advertisement rarely fails to get its man.

Classified advertisements in the Mercury are low in price and have proven quite effective. One week 50c; two weeks 75c; four weeks $1.00. There is a liberal allowance of thirty words.

FAREWELL AND WELCOME—

AT THE NEXT meeting of the council of the Municipal District of Cornhill, two familiar faces will be absent and two new faces present. In the very nature of things the personnel of public bodies change. In a democracy, forces greater than can be exerted by any one person bring about changes. Sometimes these changes are for good, sometimes they are not good, and quite often they are neither good or bad, simply bringing to a public body a change of personnel in which the newcomers are as zealous and sincere as the retiring members. But when these changes do occur, there is always a feeling of regret at the departure of long association, but such is the nature of human emotion this regret rarely does, and certainly should not, lessen the welcome to incoming members.

A MINIMUM PRICE—

IT IS NATURALLY expected that a weekly newspaper published in a rural section of the Canadian West would support the demand for a Wheat Board and a minimum set price for wheat. But merely supporting this demand is not sufficient. Sound reasons must be given that it is to the advantage of Canada as a nation that the federal government deal with the wheat problem in such a way that the full force of the wheat debacle does not fall on Western Canada. This is especially evident when it is remembered that there is hardly a wheat producing country today in which the producer is not subsidized to some extent, and in most cases at a much higher figure than the Western farmer expects of the federal government.

We remember a number of years ago listening to a radio speech by Hon. Frank Oliver in Edmonton. He had just come from the East to Edmonton in late summer and spoke of the vast waving fields of wheat, exclaiming fervently "Therein lies power." Continuing he pointed out that a hay crop power is still there, that is, when the wheat fields are actually waving of course, there must be yields. But this power has been so well braked by Canadian economics and Canadian political outlook that the machine of prosperity and human well being it is supposed to turn is, at the best, just toddling along. Certainly it is running neither fast or smoothly.

The history of the Canadian West for the past fifty years has been one of development. First Manitoba, then Saskatchewan, then Alberta. All these provinces were, as we understand agriculture today, virgin territory. Settlers came in from the south and from Europe, some had capital but generally the means of securing settlers were chiefly youth and enthusiasm. Homesteads were filed on, railroads came through, banks were opened, credit was made available. Each year there was thrust upon the westerner! Loans were easy to get, so easy that there was an abundance of money, with the inevitable result that buying was brisk which in turn raised prices almost to inflationary heights. Men did not buy land on a production basis nearly so much as in relation to what their neighbors paid for or received for theirs. This aggravated the interest problem because interest at any given rate is twice as much on a $4000.00 loan as on a $2000.00 one, and the interest had to come out of production.

During the time protected industry in the east was reaping the benefit of surging development in the west. Through interest on loans and through the sale of industrial articles produced under the shelter of high protection, millions of dollars, the product of western lands and labor, found their way through various channels to the East. That the actual purchases by the east of western products at the time were relatively small seemed to escape notice. Then came the war with high peak prices and temporary prosperity — and after the war and a ten year period, the crash, due to forces beyond their control, some of which emanated from the east, with good intentions perhaps, western farmers now find themselves with much more than their portion of their market gone and a low world market price for their chief product, wheat. But wheat is still potential power and will remain so as long as there are hungry people to feed and in Europe today, from all reports, there surely are a lot of these. Europe cannot take our wheat because we do not buy her manufactured articles, and we cannot profitably take her manufactured articles because of protected industries in Eastern Canada. We heartily agree with Premier Bracken of Manitoba as reported, that if the federal government can afford to protect Eastern industry to the tune of nearly $50,000,000 a year they will have to find a way of bonusing Western agriculture to a like amount. It is almost hopeless for western farmers to compete with highly subsidized agricultural markets abroad and highly protected industrial markets at home. In general we deplore mention of a break in Confederation, but if no other way out is possible, it may become necessary for Western provinces to make their own trade treaties with European powers, taking their goods in exchange for wheat at a fair valuation. By far the best method for the immediate present would be for the federal government to peg the price of wheat at a figure commensurate with a fair standard of living for western agriculturalists.

Annual Meeting Of The Ratepayers Of Municipal District Of Beaver Lake

Held at Haight, on Saturday, February 18, 1939.

Mr. N. M. Solberg, Returning Officer, called the meeting to order. Mr. E. A. Moon was appointed Chairman and Mr. J. W. McKellar, secretary.

Minutes of the last Annual Meeting were read and adopted on motion of Mr. Jack Houston.

Moved by Mr. J. Houston, seconded by Mr. N. Lucas, Whereas, our Provincial Government has passed an amendment to the Municipal Districts Act, which authorizes the Minister of Municipal Affairs to dissolve any Municipal District without the consent of the ratepayers within that Municipality, And Whereas, under the powers of this Act, the Minister has order the formation of the larger Municipal Division, uniting two or more Districts into one unit, specifying the boundaries of the same and its future form of administrative procedure, And Whereas, we feel that this action that the federal government deal with the wheat problem in such a way that the full force of the wheat debacle does not fall on Western Canada. This is especially evident when it is remembered that there is hardly a wheat producing country today in which the producer is not subsidized to some extent, and in most cases at a much higher figure than the Western farmer expects of the federal government.

Moved by Mr. Mike Hrabok, seconded by Mr. A. Senick, that the Municipal District pay one half the cost of exercise required by the M.D. for treatment of horses. Carried.

A report from the Alberta Hail Insurance Board covering the first year's operations was submitted to the meeting. Those present appeared to be well satisfied with the protection afforded under the new plan of hail insurance.

The Financial Statement for the year 1938 was discussed at length and was approved on motion of Mr. Nick Lucas, seconded by Mr. Mike Hrabok.

Moved by Mr. J. Houston, seconded by Mr. N. Lucas, Whereas, it has been brought to our attention that our Provincial Government has enacted an amendment to the M.D. Act, which disqualifies any ratepayer as a candidate for municipal office, where taxes are more than two years in arrears.

And whereas, as Citizens of the British Commonwealth of Nations, governed by traditions of democracy which include "majority rule and extension of the full franchise rights to all of our citizens within the borders of any self-governing state," Now Therefore, Be It resolved that we, the ratepayers of M.D. of Beaver Lake No. 486, in Annual Meeting assembled, demand the repeal of this amendment at the present Session of our Legislature and that the full franchise rights of every municipal ratepayer be restored as formally. Carried unanimously.

Meeting adjourned.

Edmonton Plans For Royal Visit

The Royal Visit Committee of P. W. Abbot, K.C., Chairman, G. H. M. Blackburn, A. W. Haddow, H. Hilton Martin and Frank Pepper, delegated and appointed by the Government of Alberta and the City of Edmonton with the approval of the Honorable the Lieutenant Governor as a special Committee charged with the responsibility of preparing plans and proposals to be carried out in connection with the visit of Their Majesties the King and Queen to Edmonton on June 2nd, from the hours 2.30 p.m. to 10.30 p.m., opened its office in Room 120 Macdonald Hotel on Monday, January 30th, and has been in daily session since that time. It was appointed out by His Honor that this Committee would be expected to make all arrangements necessary with regard to the Royal Progress Route from the Airfield in the city of Their Majesties, and formulates plans incidental to their visit.

The recommendations thus submitted to Ottawa for approval the Route of the Royal Progress covers a distance of approximately 12 miles designed to complete the time that will elapse from the time of the arrival of Their Majesties at 2:30 p.m., until about 10:30 p.m. when the Committee having in mind the fact that the visit is to Edmonton, the Capital City of Alberta, and the plan of reception of a provincial nature, has sought the co-operation of municipal officials and heads of organizations in all parts of Alberta, lying north of Red Deer, to assemble and welcome their royal visitors

HOW DO YOU PUNISH?

Many persons today are perplexed by situations arising out of the impulse to punish children for misbehavior.

Punishment grew to a form of power over childhood that can be readily abused. What someone vitally called a "carriage of malpractice" too often occurs. A serious minded mind may be overlooked when Dad is in a good mood, while a mere trifling error calls forth parental wrath when he is cross or tired. Each case alone is bad for the child, but both together give him a false sense of values and are highly confusing.

Punishment is too often a kind of revenge against annoyance or grievance. Children are sometimes punished without understanding why and they come to mature old conclusions about the punishment. Your little girl may believe that her punishment or privation makes up for the misbehavior, that the matter is adjusted thereby, and that she can start all over again, relieved of the consequences by having taken its punishment. Sometimes a sort of barter system may be set up in the child's mind—shall she trade in the weekly movie for the counter-advantage of swimming in the river again?

Another bad result of punishment is that it often makes the child dislike the punisher rather than the objectionable conduct. An important part of the purpose of punishment is to help the child to understand what is personally unlovable and what is not. Usually this can be done without the punishment itself. Certainly whippings or other crude treatments of the kind do not give any practical information as to right and wrong.

Before punishment, it is well to consider whether the misdeed is justly a punishable one. Clearly, if we punish children for temperamental disagreements or for harmless, though embarrassing, breaches of etiquette, or for mistakes of judgement, or insufficient information, our amendment will have been used up when a real cause for punishment actually occurs.

Children, as a matter of fact, like discipline especially when they can understand it. Often their impulses are contradictory and such inner conflicts make them want guidance. Disciplinarians should be more tolerant and liberal. Treat the child with consideration for his feelings. If he is concentrating on some activity, don't expect instant obedience. Put yourself in his place. It is surprising how many problems vanish by this attitude.

That, however, does not mean that the parent might be "soft". He should be firm and consistent, but reasonable and kind. Keep your discipline impersonal so that it is friendly relation between you and the children is never lost. Make clear the reason for the discipline. Don't punish for every little mistake. Explain the better way. Do not threaten the child with consequences forebodings. When there is anything unpleasant to do, do it and get it over with.

DIFFER ON DISCIPLINE

Mrs. T. F. E.: My husband and I have frequent differences of opinion in matters of discipline. What do you recommend?

Generally, one parent is called upon to make the immediate decision in a case. Where the other feels this decision unwise, the parents should discuss it privately, not when the child is present. If a reversal appears desirable, explain it honestly to the child as based on the other parents reason. Sometimes a legitimate difference can be overcome by a compromise. If there is a fundamental conflict, consult a detached person who can view the matter objectively.

Wainwright Presbyterial Missionary Society Held Annual Spring Meeting

The Wainwright Presbyterial of Jas Women's Missionary Society, held their Annual Spring meeting in Tofield United Church on February 22. Mrs N L. Campbell, president, presided and delegates were present from Wainwright, Irma, Holden and Ryley. The morning session commencing at 10 30 was devoted to reports from the different departments and appointing of Committees. Mrs. W. G. Firth, in a few well chosen words, extended a hearty welcome to the visitors, Mrs. Locke of Irma replying. The Treasurer's report proved gratifying, showing the allocation for the year had been met, $125 having been forwarded to the Branch Treasurer The Presidential address by Mrs. Campbell, based on "Love" brought the morning session to a close, when the ladies adjourned to the church basement, where the Tofield friends provided a splendid luncheon. "After Dinner" speeches followed Rev. E. Longmire brought greetings on behalf of the Presbytery, Mrs. Taape on behalf of Holy Trinity Church, Rev. and Mrs. D. K. Allan and Mrs. J. Eaton, Ryley, also contributed. Further reports were given in the afternoon, showing the organization to be in a healthy state. Mrs. Hamilton, President of Wainwright Auxiliary gave a challenging address, stressing the importance of individual influence towards world peace. The Group meetings were held by the same as last year, Mrs. N. L. Campbell, Holden, presiding over A Richardson, Ryley, Recording and Corresponding secretary; Mrs. A. Larke, Irma, Treasurer; and Mrs. T. E. Armstrong, Wainwright, Community Friendship Secretary. Mrs. D. K. Allan conducted the meditation services in a very impressive manner. A solo and duet was rendered during the sessions by Mrs. J. A. Richardson and Mrs. Ireland, Ryley. An increased interest in the Missionary work of our church was evidenced from the enthusiasm and zeal displayed by all present. The delegates departed for their various destinations after expressing their thanks to the Tofield friends for their generous hospitality and good fellowship which all enjoyed.

The Girls' Reply To The "Boy Friend"

There's a certain group of fellows,
Who think they are quite suspense,
You'll know at once that we refer
To the Hastings' Hockey Team.

They bid their Post Lacrosse
To sit on months hurl,
They think you can't play hockey,
Just because you are a girl.

They laugh and say we have no form
When we get on the ice,
Why, there are sorts of us girls,
And all our forms are nice.

They also claim they are butchers,
Because that's the way they're set,
The reason is there's not a girl
Around here they can get.

We, Tumbleweeds are single too,
Not one with a flask or a fit,
But don't get anxious hockey boys,
For you don't qualify

The 'Boy Friend' claims he referred,
A badly twist the James and Jane
Well, it wasn't the Hastings' Tumbleweeds.

Most of boon two other teams.

In this reply we want to prove
We girls are sweet and kind,
Who play all games with sportsmanship,
You very rarely find.

And in the end its that which wins,
Friends that are staunch and true,
When the boys are gone and down and out,
We'll still come rolling through.

—The Tumbleweeds.

Pool's Attitude On Wheat Policy

An official statement issued by the Alberta Wheat Pool gives their organization's views on the proposed federal wheat policy as follows:

"The attitude of the Alberta Wheat Pool has been and is at present that the maintaining of wheat, of the importance of the wheat industry within the general economy of the Dominion of Canada.

And of the necessity for the continuance of protection for western growers, at least to the extent of the protection afforded to them during the crop year 1938-1939, and pending the determination of a permanent western wheat and agricultural policy.

Salt Used To Keep Crocus Secret

Promising benefits to delegates the world over, a method of preserving cereal crops indefinitely has been perfected and tested by Owen E. Williams of the Bureau of Dairy Industry, U.S. Department of Agriculture. The process makes use of sodium chloride, ordinary table salt.

To 100 pounds of cream of oil percent butterfat, he adds seven pounds of salt. When cream is to be delivered come a week from the farm to the creamery, enough salt is placed in the cream jar at the beginning of the week to preserve the week's supply. Then as more cream is added after each skimming, it must be carefully mixed with the salt solution already in the jar. The jar is always scouring and also acts as an antifreeze.

John Deere Day Beat The Weather

Despite a cold, blustery day the John Deere Annual Picture program was well attended on Friday last. Three complete shows were given and full license granted each showing. To agriculturalists the reels showing tractors and implements were of educational value as well as entertaining. The reels showing work inside the John Deere Tractor factory was of special interest to all, giving a splendid view of engineering works such as rare rarely sets by residents in Western Canada. One of the features of the program was the unknown kinds of agricultural implements shown. It was almost like a trip away to see corn cultivators, corn huskers, etc., in addition to the more usual kinds of implements seen here.

The Tutile Tugger Man was a really funny comedy. If a fellow didn't laugh when seeing that there surely WAS something wrong with him. And it was equally enjoyable to the ladies too.

LINDBROOK

The election for councillors here passed off very quietly. Sixty-six persons voted, the result being F. Kortzman 39, 1 spoilt; W. Glenn, 34, 1 spoilt.

The dance in aid of the Community Hall Building Fund, put on by Messrs. Lawrence Gill and George Strudenhem was quite a jolly affair, but owing to the cold weather, drifted roads, etc., the attendance was not large, hence the finances of the fund didn't benefit much. Lindbrook orchestra supplied the music and all present enjoyed themselves immensely. The committee of the Club Building Fund wish to thank all those who helped in any way.

The usual kinds of sandwiches were served.

TOWN COUNCIL

On Monday night a regular meeting of Tofield Town Council was held at which all councillors were present.

The question of giving a permit to Kalisz Motors to install gasoline pumps again came under review. It will be remembered that this question had been voted upon at two previous meetings, each vote resulting in a tie. At the meeting on Monday the application was granted by a majority vote.

T. E. Tansey was present on behalf of the Calgary Power Company. They are proposing a new system of distributing commercial electricity, which is entirely optional with the customer and which is not limited to the farm areas They were asking formal permission to put this proposal into effect. Council granted the application.

In the cold and blustery weather,
When the frost is on the rail,
Would you like to be in a blizzard
With half a ton of mail?

In the biting blizzard weather
When the snow comes in your knees,
Would you love to fish for postmen
Who are lost in their baby jeans?

When the gimmeling cars is drifted
Underneath a foot of sleet,
Would you love to have the children
In your charge from feet to feet?

When outdoors the wind is whistling,
And the air is full of snowy,
Would you love to have a jimmy
And the blamed thing wouldn't go?

Yes, I'd love the good old friendly,
Yes, I'd love to be a postie,
But I have to buck the snowdrifts
'Cause the farmers want their mail.

I don't mind the frozen snowdrifts
When my nose is not stiff with cramp,
If you pull up the blooomin' pronies
Buy a quarter's worth of stamps.

I get more mixed in my whickers
And I get it in my socks;
But it never hurts my feelin's
Like those pennies in the box!

School Patrols In City Schools

Growth of the school patrol movement in this province has been demonstrated in Calgary where 16 schools have been organized with a patrol membership of 153.

Under the protection of the patrols have been supplied by the city, while the cost of uniforms has been borne by interested individuals and clubs interested. The cost of a sash and armlet for the patrols is approximately $10 per school.

In the work of organizing the patrols and in extending the movement full co-operation has been given by the Calgary branch of the Alberta Motor Association, which is interested in promoting measures of traffic safety at all times.

The Calgary branch of the A.M.A. also has participated in purchasing a dual-control car, first automobile of the kind placed in operation in the province, that will be used in connection with the safe driving movement in Calgary schools.

The car is used to give boys instruction in fundamental motor mechanics and safe driving, all of which is certain to play a major part in reducing the number of traffic accidents.

Tofield seniors journeyed to Irma on Tuesday to play the first game in the play-off series—the best three out of five. We understand the game was fast and clean and the score 4-2 for Irma, shows that the Irma boys were able to capitalize on their scoring chance better than Tofield.

United Church News

The Young People's Society rose to the occasion, on the official visit of the Rev Herman Burtholder, secretary of Religious Education for British Columbia and Alberta, of the United Church, Thursday, March 2nd.

It began with a banquet. Over 60 sat down to enjoy the good things prepared by the lady-members and provided by the young people.

It was a sumptuous repast. The tables were tastefully set and the "eats" were done to a King's taste.

Mr J W Chapman presided at the banquet table.

The toast-master said a few words after all had partaken and called upon Mrs. C Patterson to extend a "Welcome" to our guests—the Rev. Burtholder and to Rev. H. Lester Vikings, convener of Religious education for Wainright Presbytery and the visiting young people from Viking, Holden and Ryley

At 8.15 p.m. in the United, the "Rally" was held. The Rev. Lester presided. Musical items were given by Miss Margaret McCauley and Mrs. Patterson and Messrs McDonnell and Arnold Firth.

The Rev Harcus Burkholder delivered a splendid address on "What God May Mean to You."

There was a period of open discussion.

The large gathering of young people at the warmth of Christian fellowship and are proud to belong to a group that believes in moral regeneration through Christ and that we the workers were busy clearing up to the school room, upon unanimously they made a large circle and had Mrs. J. Chapman, Mrs. E. Rogers and Mrs. Firth in the centre and sang "For they are jolly good fellows." For their efforts included immensely to make the gathering such a success.

On Sunday evening at the regular meeting of the Young People, Mr. W. Warren, editor, gave a most interesting and illuminating talk on "The Romance of a Tin Can". It was a delightful historical and up-to-date talk on this interesting subject.

SYNOPSIS

When the wealthy Archer parents of Marjorie Wetherell both die she finds a letter telling that she has a twin sister, that she was adopted when her own parents couldn't afford to support both of them and that her real name is Dorothy Gay. Alone in the world, but with a fortune of her own, she considers looking up her own family when she has never seen. A neighbor, Tom Bowery, tries to argue her out of it and tells her he loves her and asks her to marry him. She promises to think it over but refuses to tell her family where she goes to Deer Lodge. Marjorie finds they are destitute. Her mother is dead, her life an enemy and running her office for her, but finally after many complications, agrees to take enough to buy coal and food to settle to nurse her mother's life. Her father comes in sick and hungry but hurries to the cellar to build a fire and get the house warm. Her brother Ted comes in, is resentful of her being there at first, but when he finds all that she has done both he and Betty decide they like their new sister. Meanwhile Tom Bowery finds she has disappeared and frantically tries to locate her

"I'll carry you," she said brightly, enwrapping with the frantic child. "There! There, you're cold, too, I'll take you inside this nice kitty-cat!"

She gathered her coat and put him within its folds.

It wasn't an easy trip, that, but Marjorie was very determined when she started a thing, and at last, breathless and aching in every muscle she arrived at the house, a little behind Ted and his burden.

By the time Ted arrived with the hand cart the sofa had been made comfortable and a hard little bed on the floor in the kitchen.

"What has Ted been after, anyway?" Betty suddenly asked.

"I told him to bring that first and then go get a truck and bring all the rest of the things."

"Oh!" said Betty breathing with relief. "Oh! was that he wonderful! Ted—what a lot we'll owe you."

Then they heard the front door open and heavy footsteps tramping in, and the girls flew to caution Ted, and not Bob to watch the door.

"I found Bill hanging round with nothing to do, so we brought every thing," explained Ted in a low aside to Marjorie.

It proved a lot hard to subdue Bill's voice and step, but Betty was vigilant and Bud was delighted with his office as doorkeeper, and it didn't take Bill after all to marshall in the new load of household comfort that had gone on near his one to supply necessities. When the door shut at last on Bill, and they heard his truck drive away, the brothers and sisters looked at one another in the garish light of a single stark electric bulb swinging from a long wire in the parlor ceiling and drew breaths of relief. Suddenly Betty dropped down in a big shabby faded chair, buried her face in her hands, her weary, slender young shoulders shaking with the sobs she would not allow to become audible.

Marjorie was by her side instantly, her arms about her.

"There, dear! Don't cry. Poor dear! You're so tired, aren't you? But listen! We're going to have a nice supper now and a good time getting things to rights. Come, cheer up!"

Betty raised lacerimated eyes and began to laugh softly, hysterically

"I'm—only crying—because it's so wonderful—to see our old things back again!" she gurgled.

Marjorie smiled.

"Well, it does seem more homelike, doesn't it? My! that couch looks good to me. I'm going to try it after a while, but now I'm going to take Bennie's temperature again—and see whether we need the doctor."

But while she was taking the temperature, the doctor arrived

"I've had a call out into the country," he explained as Betty opened the door for him, "and I might have to be gone all night, I thought I'd better just step in and see how the patients are before I leave. I want to make sure your mother's lungs are not involved before I go so far away!"

Betty went with him upstairs.

"All going well above stairs," he announced cheerfully when he came down. "Mother's breathing into a nice perspiration, and her lungs are clear so far. I don't expect her fever to go up tonight at all."

He glanced down at Marjorie.

"You're the sister, aren't you? You two are very much alike. Well, I think you can be sure in your mind. Anyway I'll be back in the morning."

"But we have another patient in here," said Marjorie. "I think you'd better look at her before you go. I've done all I know how to do but her temperature seems to be going up in spite of it."

She led the way to the couch.

"I don't anticipate anything serious" said the doctor with a cursory glance, and coming at Marjorie. It's her stomach, of course. Children will get all sorts of things, you know. It looks like a light case of pneumonia, but I think she'll come out all right. Don't you worry," he added comfortingly, seeing Marjorie's anxious face. "She'll be all right. They'll all be decidedly better in the morning, I'm sure."

Betty opened up and met his eyes wistfully, and Marjorie watching saw the glance, and thought what they often do the doctor had. Nice brown eyes.

Dinner was ready in a surprisingly short time, and the scattered young appetites were ready too.

Marjorie went out to the kitchen to get Bud his glass of milk, while Ted attacked the big beefsteak with the carving knife when Bud had been recovered from the pawn shop.

"It's almost too precious to cut, isn't it?" he said. And then he heard a step behind him. They all turned and there stood their father staring at them all in wonder, and sniffing the air.

"I smelled something so heavenly," he said, and he sensed a tired little smile that made him look like Ted. "Where did you get the meat, Ted?" he asked, his eyes resting on the ladies. "I didn't suppose you are having a roast."

"Sit down, Dad," said Ted laying down the knife and springing to draw up a chair for his father. "You aren't to stand up."

"Uh, I is all right," he said, pausing a hand over his temples. "I'm all right. I'd go out and see if I could get an evening's work. It might bring in a few cents and help to buy some bags of coal."

"My eye, you will!" said Ted. "You sit down and eat your dinner, that is, if you feel able to sit up."

The father sank back in the chair under Ted's powerful young handling, and looked about him.

"But you haven't told me yet where you got all this dinner?"

"Father, I'd better tell you right off quick. It's all in the family. You don't need to be troubled. It's your sister has come and she got them things."

The father looked up with great startled eyes, and turned perfectly white.

"Your sister has come? What do you mean, Elizabeth? Do you mean the little sister whom we adopted? Do you mean that she has come and gone and your mother and I did not see her?"

"No Oh no, Father," said Betty, half frightened at what her mysterious had done to her father. "She hasn't gone. She's right here in the house. Here she comes now!"

Marjorie stood there smiling with a plate of bread in one hand and the glass of milk in the other, looking as at home, and as sweet and demure-looking that he had to look twice to be sure she wasn't Betty. And Marjorie met her own father's eyes for the first time in her young life and loved him at once.

Suddenly she put down on the corner of the table the things she was carrying and went to meet the man who had risen to his feet and was staring at her, eyes unwept across the years into his arms and laid her golden head on his shoulder looking up into his face.

"Father, I've come home! Do you mind?" she said shyly.

Hungrily his arms went round her, and his face came down softly and touched hers.

"Do I mind?" he said wonderingly. "Do I mind? Oh, my little girl, where I have never seen before! My other little Betty. Do I mind?"

He touched her forehead with his lips, almost as if he felt she was not real, and then he looked over her head while all the other children sat and looked on in wonder. A radiance had come over that sudden radiance of his face.

"But what a home you have come to, my child! What a home! All the comforts gone!" Then suddenly he looked around and saw the familiar sideboard and chairs and table, and bewilderment came into his eyes.

"Am I dreaming, Ted? Or is all this real?" He turned troubled eyes on his boy.

Ted gave him a sharp look.

"It's all right, Dad, but you won't be long if you don't sit down and eat some of this beefsteak pretty quick, and I mean it."

"But, my son, I cannot eat until I understand."

"All right, tell him, Betsy!" said the boy.

"Why, Father, it's just that we have a fairy sister with pockets full of money, and she insisted on paying for everything," said Betsy.

"Do you mean," asked the father laying his fork down beside his plate with a look of fixidity, "that we are feasting on Mrs. Wetherill's money? I could not possibly do that, my dear."

There was such pain and pride in his voice that Marjorie's heart was thrown into a panic. Was pride after all to put an end to her new hopes and plans?

"Father—" she said earnestly, and did not realize how naturally she had called him that, "it isn't her money at all. It is my money. I didn't know whether you wanted me or not, or whether anybody was alive or not, but I had to come and see, I had to find out if there was anybody who really loved me a little bit"

There was the catch of a sob in her voice as she finished, and a mist in her eyes. Even young Bud paused in his chewing for an instant and looked at her sympathetically.

Then the father came out of his sorrowful daze.

"What, you?" said he tenderly. "How we have wanted you! How we have longed for you, and talked of you, and tried not to blame one another, your mother and I, for having let you go!"

"Oh, dear Father!" said Marjorie deeply stirred, and putting out a shy hand to open it. "I'm so glad it is not too late for us to try to make up a little for your suffering!"

He gathered her hand into his thin nervous one and clutched it close.

"Too late, my daughter, add salt, and sift again. Cut in shortening until pieces are about as large as a small pea. Add water, sprinkling a small amount over portion of flour mixture and stirring with fork only enough to make flour hold together. Continue until all flour is mixed. Wrap in waxed paper and chill. Roll out on slightly floured board ¼ inch thick. Cut with floured cutter into 3½ inch circles. Brush ½ of circles with melted butter and place remaining ones on top of them. Put 1 part of pastry circles in each section of hot waffle iron. Bake 3 minutes, turn off heat, and bake 1 minute longer. Cover each circle with cream of chicken and place another on top. "PROOF OF THE PUDDING . . ."

FURNACE CHEVIES FOR EIGHT

Light at the table! Today Ecnoff family or one of the 1939 type with French and "Vienna." What could be more appetizing this time of year than creamed chicken as the main course? Light enough for the season, substantial enough for health and economical enough for the purse — a perfect combination.

Fluky Chicken Shortcake
(For four relations)

2 cups sifted cake flour
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup cold shortening
1-4 to 1-3 cup cold water
Sift flour and measure, add salt, and sift again. Cut in shortening until pieces are about as large as a small pea. Add water, sprinkling a small amount over portion of flour mixture and stirring with fork only enough to make flour hold together. Continue until all flour is mixed. Wrap in waxed paper and chill. Roll out on slightly floured board ¼ inch thick. Cut with floured cutter into 3½ inch circles. Brush ½ of circles with melted butter and place remaining ones on top of them. No Speed For Speed's Sake

A rapidly growing tendency toward safer and easier driving is noticeable today more than ever before, in the opinion of C. E. McTavish General Sales Manager of General Motors Products of Canada. Commenting on the fact that a few years ago drivers were anxious to be assured that their cars would attain speeds as high as 80 or 90 miles an hour, Mr. McTavish said, "People today are learning that a sustained speed of 40 to 50 miles an hour is safer and more comfortable. At the end of the day they are left rested and their nerves are calm.

Tuesday speed can be maintained only momentarily, and the slight time advantage is far outweighed by the risk involved."

At the same time, Mr. McTavish pointed out, the driver of today has come to realize that economy is affected by driving habits. Bursts of high speed results in low gas-mileage, he says, and the running parts of the car are subjected to unnecessary strain.

Good, consistent speeds leave complete control in the driver's hands, Mr. McTavish believes, and result in better mileage averages in the long run because the driver does not have to let up so soon or so often because of its tired nerves that almost always attend periods of unnecessarily furious driving.

An Irishman had been describing his travels in the Far West and the "virgin forests" there.

"What is a 'virgin forest'? asked his friend.

"Shure now," said the Irishman, "a virgin forest is a place where the hand of man has never set foot."

The Trading Instinct

The vast and complex trading world has its origin in the individual trading instinct of man. The trading instinct is a fundamental. As much a fundamental as music or worship. The first "deal" of course is lost in the ages of time, but the pages of history do not record an era when man's possessions were not traded for other possessions or for what was accepted as money.

Today, amid the activities of giant business corporations individuals have not lost their trading instinct. National and international trade may go on. Large ships, mile-long trains, carry the products of gigantic factories and mills, banks and counting houses compute and calculate, but amid it all the small voice of the individual is often heard saying "For Sale," or "Wanted".

To those with things to sell and for those who desire to buy or trade articles, classified advertisements are the most economical and most effective publicity medium. Read by hundreds of people on the look-out for a trade, a classified advertisement rarely fails to get its man.

Classified advertisements in the Mercury are low in price and have proven quite effective. One week 50c; two weeks 75c; four weeks $1.00. There is a liberal allowance of thirty words.

THE TOFIELD MERCURY

W. Worton, Publisher

EQUINE ENCEPHALOMYELITIS—

IT IS EXPECTED by those best qualified to judge that the coming summer will see a recurrence of sleeping sickness (Encephalomyelitis) among Alberta horses. In order to make the epidemic, if the malady reaches epidemic proportions, as harmless as possible, the Provincial Department of Agriculture have already taken steps to help horse owners from unnecessary losses. They have endeavored to have available ample supplies of Chick Vaccine. Furthermore, they are hoping for the co-operation of druggists, vetinarians and municipalities, whereby the vaccine may be purchased at a reasonable price and administered to the animals efficiently and economically.

It is expected that some form of organization will be set up whereby horse owners in different districts may assemble their horses and have a fairly large number vaccinated at one time, by a competent vetinary surgeon or by men known by him and appointed by him. The number of vetinary surgeons in the province following their profession as a full time occupation is very small and if a goodly proportion of the horses are to be treated, laymen help is necessary. It is proposed that municipal councils, if they have a vetinary surgeon within their municipality, appoint him as something in the nature of a "chief", he in turn to appoint a number of other suitable individuals to work under his jurisdiction. It is not particularly difficult for intelligent horsemen to administer the vaccine, but of course if the treatment is to be effective, good vaccine must be used and strict adherence to definite methods of administering must be observed.

By working together the three Departments of Agriculture, Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, have made it possible for horses to be treated (two doses are necessary several days apart). The cost of vaccine for the treatment will be 75c retail and the cost of administering about 25c, making a total cost of $1.00 per complete treatment per horse. This is a vast improvement over previous seasons. What the Departments are particularly anxious to prevent, is the travelling throughout the country of individuals of doubtful experience and administering vaccine of doubtful value, thus giving a false sense of security to the farmer.

It is generally believed that the malady is caused by a bite from a mosquito, and the Departments are pushing the anxious that organization leading to effective treatment be made at as early a date as possible. With the month of March half gone, in a few short weeks the weather will have turned warmer, bringing with it the possibility of infection.

There is another phase to this question, of which we do not wish to say much for fear of saying the wrong thing. It is believed in some quarters that there is a connection between equine encephalomyelitis and infantile paralysis. Therefore if, as it is believed, the prevention of the equine disease has a deterrent effect upon the spread of the distressing human ailment, it is doubly important that vigorous effort be directed towards stamping it out.

BOVINE TUBERCULOSIS—

THE PROBLEM OF Bovine Tuberculosis eradication throughout this district is going to reach considerable importance during the current year. As will be remembered most readers Dr. Cowan, Dominion Government Veterinary was present at the annual ratepayers' meeting and addressed those present on the subject. Due to the fact that the meeting was primarily a ratepayers' meeting, the address was necessarily brief, but sufficient interest was created to bring about the circulation of a petition asking the government to make the district in which the signers lived a restricted area to be joined up with larger areas already formed.

A full description of the advantages and disadvantages of restricted areas, together with method of procedure to include any given territory within an area, requires too much writing for this column. Next week we hope to appear an article based on information supplied by the dominion government covering the subject fairly fully.

It might be well to say here, however, that strictly speaking, the municipality has very little to do with it. These areas are brought about by a majority application by cattle owners to the government. It is not imposed upon the cattle owners by the Government except when a majority vote of the cattle owners of a given area petition the government for it. About the only place where the municipality comes in is as regards to boundaries, and perhaps a certain amount of organization work in getting the petitions signed if the council so desires. We understand municipalities 517 and 518 to the west of Cornhill are now signed up as is also Lloyd George municipality to the south. These are not yet restricted areas, it should be noted. The problem is purely one of economics and of health safety. The cattle owner balances his expected loss and gain, weighs his responsibility to the consuming public and signs the petition or not according to the decision he has arrived at.

SOLDIER, Alta.

The Tofield Mercury,
Tofield.

Dear Sir,

May I be allowed space for comment on a Provincial Conference held in Holden on January 26. This conference was called for the purpose of organizing rural branches of the Provincial Association.

The main purpose of such an association as was set up at Holden is not very clear in the writer, particularly as to how it would benefit the taxpayers or promote the interest of rural education in general.

Through the institution of the enlarged School Divisions, local boards have been shorn of their former power, consequently are much less interested. Except as figureheads through which orders from a higher authority may be carried out. The reconstruction of authority appears to constitute the chief bone of contention as was demonstrated during the latter part of the Holden meeting when the discussion centered around the question of whether or not the authority to supervise local supplies should constitute supervision of school property.

We venture to suggest that little if to be gained under the new Act by splitting hairs over the question of authority at this time as the Act empowers the Minister to appoint as part of this Act is conform to the new opinion. This can be done merely by inserting a notice of such in the Alberta Gazette, and as the primary object of this legislation is the consolidation of all authority in the Minister, the writer is of the opinion that we feel that local boards are limited of both their former authority of dog-fight tactics between Trustees of Local Boards and Divisional Board representatives, as was demonstrated at the Holden convention will not be conducive to obtaining the former their previous rights.

Secondly, the changes of personnel and minors on the boards as they were barred at the chairman of the Divisional Board, figure that is to be fixed.

The third phase of the policy is a new and interesting development. It means that the federal government will pay a bounty on home killed pigs—especially as it applies to agriculture and will put a bottom on the prices of virtually all farm commodities.

Some very interesting plans are hatching in Ottawa and the sessions of parliament should be watched with close interest by western farmers.

—Wheat Pool Budget.

PLANS A-HATCHING

The first announcement made by Hon. James G. Gardiner, federal minister of agriculture, regarding the government's wheat policy was not well received in rural Western Canada. Among the chief critics it is believed were the federal Liberal members from the prairie provinces. The probability is that other plans will be developed which will be entirely different from that outlined in the first announcement.

It is now suggested that the new policy will be a three-fold one embodying:

1. A pooling system of marketing with a government guaranteed price, say of 60c to 70c a bushel.

2. An acreage bonusing policy to apply in distressed areas in case of crop failure.

3. The fixing of a minimum price for all primary products.

The Government seems determined to get out of the wheat marketing business and abandon the Wheat Board and to leave the marketings of wheat in the hands of the grain trade and the Pools. It has also abandoned the idea of developing "co-operative marketing" and has adopted the Australian plan of pools. To do so a minimum price guaranteed by the government will be affirmed line pools, if this offer were made exclusively to the western wheat Pools there would be an immediate howl from the grain trade about "dumping" and the government has decided to make a similar offer to the trade. If this plan proves to be successful will be upgrading a marketing pool and the grain trade will be doing likewise. There will then be two competitive pools available to the farmers.

The acreage bonusing system is to apply only to distressed areas. An estimate of this has been made in the last Budget. No one can obtain the bonus on more than 160 acres of land and not more than a maximum bonus is $2 an acre. The amount d the payment is calculated on the volume of the crop and the amount the average open market price declines below a fixed figure that is to be fixed later.

Warble Fly Control

A community effort for the control of warble flies is emphasized in a circular to be published immediately by the Department of Agriculture.

Because warble flies do not migrate for any considerable distance, concerted effort on the part of everyone within a given area will effect almost complete eradication of this pest.

The damage done by warble flies in Canada is estimated at between seven and fourteen million dollars annually. The insect not only spoils hides, but on account of its terrifying effect on cattle, it seriously reduces the yield of milk from dairy cows and retards the gains of beef cattle.

The grubs of the warble flies can be attacked by man only during the period of their development when they are imbedded in the backs of the cattle. At this time the application of derris root powder or a compound of it, either as a powder or a wash has been found most effective. The time of treatment is remarkably low and farmers are amply repaid for undertaking control measures in this way.

It is recommended that the first treatment should be made when the grubs caused by the grubs become conspicuous on the backs of the animals, and that second and third treatments should follow at twenty-eight day intervals.

Further information on the control of warble flies may be secured from your nearest district agriculturist, or you may write direct to the Department of Agriculture, Edmonton.

Maintain Board And 80 Cent Price

Strong Declaration by Board of Farmers' Company

The Board of Directors of United Grain Growers Limited desire to make the strongest possible protest against any steps which will remove in the crop year 1939-40 the protection of a guaranteed minimum price for wheat which has been accorded the wheat growing industry under the Wheat Board Act of 1935.

To ensure that protection at a time when disastrously low world market prices prevail is to threaten a crisis in the welfare of farmers of western Canada. It is also to endanger the whole welfare of the prairie provinces, with possible serious consequences to the economic future of the Dominion, and to lead to a lack of business confidence in the West.

The Board endorses the stand which has been taken by the Western Committee on markets and agricultural readjustment set up following the conference on markets for western farm products held in Winnipeg in December, 1938. It pledges itself to continued support of the efforts of that committee, widely representative and including representation of this Company and of all other farmers' organizations of western Canada.

Pope Pius XI and Canadian Rockies

In his earlier days the late Pope Pius XI achieved considerable fame as a mountaineer and scaled most of the well-known Alpine peaks. After his accession to the Papal Throne he one day told a party of Canadians visiting in Rome that he had always been interested in the Canadian Rockies and that at one time he had hoped to visit them. There were several mountains there, he said, that he would very much have liked to climb.

The fates directed his path to other heights culminating in the Chair of St. Peter, but the story was brought back to Canada and at the direction of Sir Edward Beatty a collection of photographs of the Rockies was bound together in a handsome portfolio of white calf-skin and presented to His Holiness with the compliments of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Sir Edward received a most courteous and kindly acknowledgment which is now preserved in the Company's archives.

John Deere Tractor Contest

SECOND PLACE ESSAY

John Deere has, for many years been among the leading makers of tractors.

Of all the tractors built, the simplicity of the John Deere is way above the rest.

All moving parts are easily accessible for adjustment and repairs. It has fewer parts than most other tractors, therefore taking care and keeping it in fine shape is much easier. It takes no trained mechanic to operate a John Deere, therefore a schoolboy can easily look after and handle it.

It is built to burn a low grade of fuel cheaply and safely, year in and year out. There is no other wheeled tractor that can equal a John Deere for cheap operation which is one of the chief things a farmer will look for when buying a tractor.

Its variety of speeds also enable a farmer to use a tractor for all jobs at a low cost.

Its fewer parts are all larger, stronger and a longer life is built into every part. Its sturdier chain driven drive, along with its sturdy pintoon and connecting rods also a strong frame and chassis.

Had has had one for thirteen years and has not as yet had any major breakdown. It has done the work on two sections of land, and pulled a twenty-eight inch binder, which should speak for itself.

These things along with many others should prove beyond a doubt why a farmer of Western Canada should buy a John Deere tractor.

This essay was written by Evelyn Stauffer, Age 14, Tofield, Alta.

WHAT! DECIDED AT LAST?

After giving this matter our careful attention,

We have arrived at a different conclusion,

Two will be fully for us to say not a word,

And let the girls get away with their illusion,

It seems the impression they want to give,

Is that they wouldn't have us on a bet,

That should we propose how it tickles them so,

To tell of the successful answer we'd get.

Almost, we can hear faint whispers,

And feel that sympathy was coming our way,

Ah! the poor boys, they don't seem to mind,

Since the girls to their proposals said "nay."

Now in all fairness, I ask this of you,

Why should our freedom we throw away?

Why should we rich all by asking the question,

And forever afterwards rue that day.

No, we value the joys of single life,

Where we're free to come and go,

What compares with the quietness of little else I for?

Peaceful solitude at close of the day.

With lengthening shadows day's work is done,

We greet our home with a little song,

Our boots we can toss in a corner,

There's no one to tell us 'tis wrong,

Yes! Oh yes, we do hold dear,

The solid comfort of a little shack,

We vote we have the right to do so,

No such thing as a set time to be back.

Of course a frying pan each we'll have to buy,

Tweedd needs be both large and deep,

Our only hope when we hang it up,

Is that inspiration won't bother our sleep.

Once in awhile the boys would gather,

The battles of old to discuss,

We'd sing our old songs, stay as long as we please,

There'd be no one to stir up a fuss.

Now you will see why we're single,

We trust it will cause no surprise,

We only hope that nothing those "Tumbling Weeds" say,

Will ever cause you to think otherwise

—The Ex-Bay Priced.

Cornhill Councillors Burn Mid-Night Oil

The first regular 1939 meeting of the Council of Municipal District of Cornhill was held at the municipal hall on Monday, March 13th.

The meeting was a very hearty one there being an unusually large number of delegations and individuals desiring to interview council. Due to car troubles Councillor Forshay was prevented from arriving until 11:30 a.m. and from that hour until 12:15 midnight, council dealt with one thing after another.

All councillors were present including Anderson, Coombes, Holmberg, Ketchamon, Forshay and Walker.

The acting secretary read report of returning officer re nomination and election. Results of election were: Div. 4, Glenn S. Kertzman 74, Div. 5, C. Coombes and C. Marden were nominated, Mr. Marden withdrawing within the 48 hour limit. Chester Coombes and Frank Kertzman were declared elected. Their declarations of office were then read.

Nominations for reeve was then called for and on the motion of Councillor Anderson, Councillor Walker was nominated. Councillor Holmberg moved that nominations close and Councillor Walker was elected reeve by unanimous vote.

Councillor Anderson was then elected deputy-reeve.

The minutes of last council meeting were read together with a list of accounts passed, and upon motion the three were adopted.

Councillor Kertzman brought up the matter of payment relief measures to the stores saying that he had been requested to ask that they be paid semi-monthly instead of every two months. Upon motion it was decided that all store relief bills be paid semi-monthly.

Mrs. Harmony interviewed council re the construction of a small stretch of road around North Cooking Lake. She was of the opinion that a culvert and about 20 rods of grade would answer the purpose and would shorten car travel to the highway by two miles. Other parts of the road was found hard sand bottom and the amount of money needed quite small.

Mr. John Mercer was also on the same subject, saying that Mrs. Mc-Harmony's plan was not practical. The proposed road would go around some sarcovers which at times were under water and a piling bridge would be necessary. However the distance saved would be three-quarters of a mile, not two miles. It would also have the affect of cutting off Mr. Mercer's water which was necessary if he was to continue farming, as the suggested road ran through his place.

On the motion of Councillor Holmberg, a committee composed of Councillors Anderson and Coombes was appointed to investigate and report to the council in due course.

Mr. Peter Enns interviewed Council re the road work done in 1938. He has a contract with the C.P.R. and paid two years taxes, a part of another two years, but due to arrears a caveat had been filed against the land. If the land went up for tax sale, the C.P.R. would likely buy it in for taxes and he would lose the land. There was some broke on this place but he had leased another farm and if got any crop at all would be able to pay a substantial amount next fall. Council recommended that he consolidate.

Adjournment for lunch.

Mr. A. Rogers interviewed Council re the construction of a road from the north end of Lake Isle to Victoria, B.C.

Mrs. Davison, Mrs. Coombes, Mr. and Mrs. H. McGinitie, Mr. Chas. Whillans and Mrs. Margaretta, Mr. B. Stairs, Harold Coomber, Lloyd Whillans, Donnelly and Harvey McGinitie took in the ice carnival in Edmonton one day last week.

Mr. Martin Lawson underwent an operation for appendicitis Monday at the Edmonton hospital. We wish him a speedy recovery.

Mrs. Martin Lawson and baby son, Wesley, are staying at the home of Mrs. Lawson's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce, in the absence of Martin.

LOCAL & PERSONAL

Plan on attending the Concert featuring Mr. Deacutis all Edmonton, all-continental, assisted by local artists, on Monday March 27, in the United Church, sponsored by the W.M.S.

Mrs. D. K. Allen spent a few days with her daughter, Mrs. Provost, in Edmonton last week.

On behalf of Mrs. Hamm, Tofield, Mrs. Hamm was now receiving $25.00 monthly allowance. There were seven children, one of whom was ill, diphtheria, at the time, and in destitute circumstances. Mrs. Hamm worked when possible. Council agreed to consider the case.

Mr. Olaf Olsen interviewed Council re road work done in 1938 for which he had not received payment. Council had claimed that work was done without proper authorization. The council were under the impression the farmer had not signed the paysheet, but Mr. Olsen said, formen first refused claiming he had been forced into subscription signing the sheet. Mr. Olsen wanted the payment now that he had waited for it several times but could not get it. As the problem dated back to 1938 and the paysheets had never been formally passed for payment, there was doubt as to what could be done in the case. On motion the acting secretary was asked to try and find it.

A delegation composed of Messrs W. and G. Abernethy and A. J. Hazelton, with Mr. McCallum as spokesman interviewed council, Mr. Hazelton spoke regarding the resolution in respect to an independent audit, saying there was a difference of opinion within the delegation regarding this. His personal opinion was that it should be left to the discretion of the council. A number of other ratepayers had intended joining the delegation but were unable to attend. He said that the secretary had lost the evidence of quite a number of the ratepayers and may felt that council should hire a new secretary. Personally he was of the opinion that Council should see their own discretion, as they were elected to all the ratepayers business.

Reeve Walker said he had made enquiries and no audit such as was asked for could cost anything below from $800.00 and $1000.00.

Mr. Harrison said Council should change their auditors The real kick in many cases is lack of knowledge on the part of the ratepayers as to exactly what the secretary received from the municipality. The secretary should receive a good salary, but commissions, consolidation costs and such like should go into the general municipal fund.

The subject at this point changed. Mr. H. Lee asking who should look after relief. Councillor Forshay replied that the councillor of each division together with Mr. Stinson were appointed last year. Mr. Lee asked if severals was was compulsory, to which Mr. Swabey answered no.

Reeve Walker then called for order and said that Mr. Abernathy had the floor.

Mr. Geo. Abernathy said regarding the $800 to $2000 estimate, it was not necessary for auditor to interview all ratepayers. Any request for an audit was largely to let council have confidence thereon. The secretary was paid in all too many different ways and the ratepayers don't know what is going on. The ratepayers were entitled to know every cent the secretary received from the municipality. Regarding the special audit, the ratepayers have not only succeeded in, they have requested it.

Mr. W. Abernathy said leaving everything to council has resulted in the administration of the office not being satisfactory. Council should take ratepayers more into their confidence

U.F.W.A. NOTES

Mrs. A. P. Moss entertained the large crowd of members and visitors who attended the March meeting.

Three brand-new members joined and a large number of former members signed up for 1939.

The Roll Call "I Should Like To Know" was an enthusiastic affair, the wide range of questions demonstrating that even U.F.W.A. members have things to learn, and that here is the place to get information and even local hints.

The exhibit for the summer conference was discussed and arranged for. The conference is to be held this year on Tofield in the second week of July.

The paper, "Women's part in Canadian Progress" by Mrs. T. E. Murray, was one of the finest in the history of the local . . . starting with the war heroines of the days of the French colonists, on through the early settlement and development of the new land, of the medical missionaries, the poets, writers and judges, the struggle for a place in the politics of Canada, and the brave pioneer home-makers. It was a fascinating and inspiring story of the women who have claimed Canada as their own.

Another order of the popular U.F.W.A. Cook Book is on hand and copies may be had from its secretary Mrs. A. Bigland, phone 1406.

Next meeting will be 2nd Thursday in April, the place to be announced later

AMISK CREEK

The Ladies' Aid held their monthly meeting at the A. Patterson home on Tuesday of last week. Most of the members and a large number of visitors were present. It was decided that the Amisk Creek District have an Old Timer's Gathering sometime in June. It will then be 65 years since the first settlers settled here. We will give you more about this later. SYNOPSIS

When the wealthy foster parents of Marjorie Penfield both die she finds a letter telling that she is their foster daughter, and that when her own parents couldn't afford to support both of them and that her real name is Dorothy Gay. Alone in the world, but with a fortune of her own, she considers looking up her own family whom she has never seen. A neighbor, Evan Bowser, tries to argue her out of it and tells her he loves her and asks her to marry him. She promises to think it over but decides first to see her family. She goes to their address. Finds that they are destitute. Her sister and brother resent her being there but her mother and father are very joyful over it. Finally, when she buys them all the things they need the whole family is delighted over the prospect. They telephone to the telephone office called Bookstower where they lived before her father lost his job.

"Oh, I'll straighten it out a little. But I wish you would go up with him this time. I hate to meet him looking this way. I signed the above half out of my dress last night when I stooped over to pick up something, and I've just spilled some prune down the front of it. I'm a sight! And that is the only dress I have. I couldn't possibly get it washed out and ironed and on before he comes."

"Oh, I see its fine that," said Marjorie smiling, "you'll wear one of my dresses, of course. We're just the same size, so it's easy to fix. Let's open my suitcase and rummage."

Betty's eyes lighted with sudden longing, but her lips set in a thin line.

"Indeed I couldn't don't myself out in your wonderful clothes. I couldn't do that!"

"No?" said Marjorie tauntingly. "Suppose I don't you then? Come now, let's see what I've got that will fit."

She dashed into the front hall, brought back her airplane baggage and opened it right there in the living room where the ruralest eyes of her beauty-starved sister.

Marjorie rushed under the most unsuitable packing bags that contained frivolous evening things and pulled out two knitted dresses, simple of line, lovely of quality, and rich of color.

"There!" said Marjorie happily, "take your pick. I think there's a blue one here somewhere, too. You here it is," and she flung it across a chair. "Put them all on and see which you like the best!"

Betty stood spellbound.

"Oh! I couldn't wear those lovely things. It wouldn't seem right!"

"Now, please, Betty, don't spoil things by objections. Put them on one at a time and let me see which is the most becoming.

Betty finally chose the dark blue. "It is how dreary than the others," she said gravely, "though it's awfully smart. I couldn't ask anything handsomer on this earth. I never thought I'd have a chance to even try on one of those wonderful hand-knit confections."

"Well, I'll be awfully careful of it," compromised Betty, "and I'll take it off as soon as the doctor has gone."

"Nonsense! You'll do no such thing!" said Marjorie. Here, I've got a couple of little cotton house gowns, sort of aprons they are, to slip over another dress when you're actually working. You take the blue one and I'll take the pink, and then we can get each other apart. We'll put them on for kitchen work."

"You make life a kind of play," said Betty as she wonderingly obeyed. "It doesn't seem right to be doing up the like this to make a bed."

Presently they heard the doctor coming upon the porch and Betty in the slim blue dress went to open the door, her hair a little gold flame of light about her shapely head. Marjorie, standing back in the tiny parlor almost out of view had time to notice the quick look of interest in the doctor's face as he took account of the exceedingly pretty girl who was meeting him, and the little flush of rose that crept up into Betty's cheeks as she met his gaze.

Then the doctor turned and looked keenly at Marjorie.

"Oh, you're the new sister, aren't you?" he said pleasantly. "Aren't you twins? You look so very much alike. I doubt if I could have told you apart if I hadn't met Miss Betty several times.

Marjorie looking up caught a bright flame of color on Betty's face and thought how pretty she looked in the new dress. She wondered in passing if this new pleasure was interested in her sister?

Betty lingered a moment at the door talking with the doctor, asking him particularly about her mother's diet and medicine, and the young doctor looked at her approvingly and smiled as he finally went out.

Ever since she had arrived Marjorie had been planning what she would do, but there hadn't as yet been time to carry out her plans.

"Monday you and I ought to go out and do some Christmas shopping," said Marjorie to Betty as they were putting everything in closing order Saturday evening after supper.

"Christmas shopping, my eye! A lot of Christmas we going I would do. I haven't got ten cents of my own," said Betty ruefully.

"Oh, yes, you have," laughed Marjorie. "Look in your purse. I put some in there this afternoon while you were down at the store and it's for Christmas shopping and nothing else."

"Do you think I would go Christmas shopping with your money?" asked Betty scornfully.

"It's not my money," laughed Marjorie, "it's yours. I gave it to you so we could have some fun. You don't think if we are to be sisters we do all the shopping myself, and not have anybody else be getting up secrets too? Now don't act that way."

"And I need to think you were generous," said Betty sorrowfully.

It was Sunday morning while they were getting ready for church that Marjorie asked quite casually:

"Where do you go to church? Is it far from here?"

Betty stopped stirring the pancake batter she was preparing and stared at time.

"Go to church?" she laughed. "We don't go. We haven't time, we left Brentwood. For one thing we didn't have the clothes to go there or anywhere else. And for another thing I guess we were all too discouraged to bother about church. People don't feel much interested in going to church when they are having such a time as we've had. It isn't easy to believe in a God when the people like Father and Mother suffer as they have done. I don't believe in a God myself."

Marjorie looked at her aghast.

"Oh, Betty! That's awful! You mustn't talk that way."

"Why not. Td like to know? Do you believe in a God?"

"Certainly."

"Why do you?"

Marjorie looked at her thoughtfully.

"I never stopped to think about why," she said slowly, "but I do. I certainly do!"

"Well, I didn't seem to worry you, only you asked about the church and I suppose you will be disappointed in us if that's what you expect of us. Not one of us goes to church except Ted. He's the religious one of the family."

"Ted?" said Marjorie lifting astonished eyes.

"Yes, Ted. He's as faithful as the clock. He walks away back to Brentwood every Sunday. He's got a church on a young preacher back there, and we can't keep him away. He'll probably want to walk you a way out there with him if you suggest church to him."

Ted looked at Marjorie with a sudden sparkle in his eyes.

"Sure, I'll take her," he said differently. "But you haven't said. There's no outline except a long roundabout way."

"I'll love to walk!" said Marjorie to Marjorie and her brother started off to church.

"I guess you'll be ashamed of me, but they don't mind clothes where we're going."

"No," said Marjorie thoughtfully, "I'm not ashamed of you, I'm proud of you. Things like that are only comparative anyway, aren't they? They shouldn't have any part in going to church."

Ted eyed her speculatively, and finally ventured another question:

"Are you a church member, too?"

"Sewed?" said Marjorie altogether startled. The phrase was not common in her vocabulary and she looked at Ted in surprise.

"You become to born again, you know."

She gave him another keen look and as if he were answering the question in her eyes he said:

"You believe, you know, that's how you get to be born again. That's how you get saved. You just believe."

"Believe?" said Marjorie inquiringly. She didn't say "believe what?" But her tone said it. So he answered.

"Believe that Jesus is the Son of God and died to take our sins upon Himself and suffer their penalty." He explained it gravely, as if he had done it before, and understood thoroughly what it meant.

"Why, I guess I believe that," said Marjorie. "I've never really thought much about it, but I believe it of course. It's all in the Bible, isn't it? I believe the Bible. I was taught to believe that when I was very young, though I'm not sure I know much about it."

"Gee, it's great when you get in touch with God," said Ted irrelevantly.

Marjorie looked at him in surprise.

"Have you studied it?"

"Sure! We had Bible classes twice a week at the Brentwood chapel. Gosh, I was sorry to move away!"

"You must have had a good teacher," said Marjorie wonderingly.

"I'll say we have. He was swell! He seemed to know just what you'd be going through that day, and how to show you where you'd get off the track, see?"

"Who is this teacher?"

"Gideon Keaver' his name. He's been to Princeton and to Princeton Seminary a little over a year, but he certainly knows his Bible. He can be certainly knows his Bible. He can be certainly knows his Bible. He can be heard before. But you'll hear him, for he's coming to Tofield."

"Well, I hope I shall be able to hear him going away over him," Marjorie smiled.

Ted turned red.

"Gosh, I'm not like that. You're sensible But he's a prince, you know. He's the best fellow I ever heard of, and were his hair way off on the back of his head like he was bored with it he would still be the best one to recommend to associate with common people."

"Then she don't know Gideon Keaver?"

"No, she wouldn't be introduced one day when I brought him home. She said she didn't care to know preachers, they would bore her, and it might be embarrassing to have him about the house. I'm sorry I ever mentioned it."

"Oh, I'm not rather a hard time," suggested Marjorie gently.

"Sure she has! We've all had a hard time. And can't been a good scout, nuthid like everything to take care of Mother and Father, and that, but still—sometimes she makes me sick."

He suddenly broke off and his voice grew jubilant. "There's Brentwood for you up there on the hill! And that's our house, that long low stone house with the white pillars to the front. Isn't it a peach for location? And there! Upon my word if that isn't your father and mother now!"

Then Marjorie looked up to see a family built young man coming toward her with astonishingly wonderful eyes that seemed to look more further into life than most men see. They had a deep reverent relief to them. She remembered it if could be real. She had never seen a young man who had that look.

That Girl's In Again

"I caught my finance looking at another girl."

"Are you going to break the engagement?"

"Certainly not! I'm going to fight for my rival!"

Several plans for the temporary assistance of Western farmers are now being considered by Parliament.

Western opinion, as represented by the Bracken Conference, favors the continuation of the present 80 cent per bushel guarantee on wheat; but some people seem to favor instead a plan for giving additional assistance to those farmers who might have poor or no crops.

Meanwhile it should not be overlooked, that the plans being considered only this over the present emergency, and do not in any way deal with the real problem which must be solved, if Western Canada's primary wheat industry, and so her farming population, is to be maintained. That problem simply is to win back world's markets recently lost for about 100 million bushels a year of Canadian wheat.

The studies I have made force me to the conclusion, that these markets can only be regained, in the long run, by means of a resolute lowering of Canadian tariffs; all so that foreign-ers can get more grain to us, enabling us then in turn to buy more of our wheat.

I strongly urge all farmers, and other Western people, to study most earnestly the future prospects of our wheat industry, with which is so bound up the very existence of us all. Following Easter here I shall be in Seminary a little over a year, but he certainly knows his Bible. He can be certainly knows his Bible. He can be heard before. But you'll hear him, for he's coming to Tofield."

Celebrate St. Patrick

St. Patrick's Day calls for something special in the way of food. Treat yourself to a real festive dinner—a thick juicy steak, green crisp paper across the table, some fancy paper napkins, and maybe a wee sprig of shamrock for the centre. Then for your food, here's something for your bag of tricks—because after all, St. Patrick did work miracles!

BAKED FISH WITH PINEAPPLE

Line a greased casserole with sliced or cubed pineapple (drained). Add 2 cups of cooked, flaked fish—whitefish, haddock or salmon are suggested—mixed with ½ cup of cream, brown with salt an pepper. Beat together two cups of mashed potatoes, 1 beaten egg, 4 tablespoons of milk and a dash of paprika. Place this on top of the fish mixture Bake in moderate oven till hot and brown. Top with grated Canadian cheese just before removing from the oven. Fresh fillets are best of a sensational lowering of prices; but if you can't get them frozen will be a fair substitute.

After the dance, a few of the guests gathered around the piano, and you will agree that you be a good line up to good St. Patrick.

Received

"Well," said the lawyer for the defense in his client, "I was certainly surprised at your conviction."

"I wasn't," said the poor fellow. "All my fault? I put up a magnificent fight for you."

"Yes, sir, but you pulled at the jury that you demanded justice for me, and I'll try never to do it to me."

Picked on a Monday morning, packed and mailed, they were delivered at the Montreal address the next evening. They went by boat from Victoria to Vancouver and crossed the continent in a Trans-Canada Air Lines plane. Their speedy journey and plenty of waxed paper kept them fresh.

Cornhill Municipal District Council Meeting

Councillor Holmberg addressed the delegation, saying in part, Mr. Harrison has been very fair. We know there has developed a lot of astonishing which is not in the good interests of either the ratepayers or the council. He appealed to them to start the new year with confidence and goodwill. He had made a study of Carshill financial statement and others also and we have a good statement. Our tax levy is a little higher than some but this is not due, as many believe, to the purchase of road machinery, because he firmly believed that the purchase of this machinery would ultimately result in the lowering of the tax levy. Three years ago the council was faced with a number of accumulated bills. There were a number of overdue hospital accounts, mother's allowances and several other accounts that had in the meantime been brought down to reasonable amounts. A surveyor is the council's duty to consider the amount the farmer receives for his butter, cream, wheat, etc., and the farmer can only pay so much. It is poor policy to kill the goose that lays the golden egg. He would cut down on all controllable expenses and put all the expenses are controllable. He would cut down on what the councillors receive, the secretary, the assessor and health officer. During a period of error thirty years have passed by and not remember a time when the future appeared so dark. Regarding the audit, if anyone thought there had been irregularity, specific charges should be made. He agreed that the auditor's report should get a fair salary. He was pleased at the annual meeting, as from the report of the auditor, appearing in the press the financial statement was very satisfactory. He thanked the council for their kind and when his time was not said. He appealed for harmony and co-operation.

Mr. W. Abernathy—Can Mr. Holmberg tell what the secretary was paid during the past few years?

Councillor Holmberg—Yes, if I had access to the records.

Mr. Abernathy—From the auditor's statement.

Councillor Holmberg — No. The statement is made out on a form drawn up by the government.

Mr. Harrison said he understood the usual thanks was given, but it was not a perfunctory form, that there is another form, a municipal balance sheet.

Councillor Holmberg — The people can be assured that the council will work in full co-operation with the town.

Mr. Wanger interviewed Council regarding agreement on his quarter section. It was suggested that he come in later and as the Minister had now approved the sale, the secretary would fix up an agreement of sale with him.

Mr. Van Buskirk interviewed Council asking for a road to school and town from his place. He presented a petition signed by ratepayers in his district. The Council were unable at that time to give definite assurance but promised to consider the matter.

Mr. McCarthy interviewed Council re the condition of mail route due to deep snow. He said in five years they had not missed a trip but had to turn back today. On recent other occasions he had to travel 71 miles to do 46 miles. He read a letter from the postal department which stated that uninterrupted service was dependent upon roads being passable at all times this being made possible by co-operation on the part of the residents. Council felt that as bad road conditions were solely due to snow and they had no equipment for the removal of snow there was nothing they could do. It would be a very costly business keeping the roads open during the winter months.

Mr. C. Morden interviewed Council re building of a high road up his gravel pit. Same refers from the previous straight north. The men along the line will be willing to donate the timber poles, etc., if council will put in the dirt. They need a high road up there pretty bad. There is a very lively mink farm on it. The first year they sold $1,000 worth of pelts and last the year has been mostly donated.

Mr. John Brown interviewed Council re school surplus. He said that the ratepayers were willing that this plan must agree to slaughter ox-cutters, to promptly cleanse and disinfect. Cattle must not be brought in cattle from coming in contact with cattle coming from other districts. Cattle are maintained on the premises, brooding operations must be restricted to a limited number.

At March 21, 1923, there were 40, 642 supervised herds in Canada, of which Alberta had 2,164.

RESTRICTED AREA PLAN

The object of the plan is the eradication of tuberculosis in definite areas. At least two-thirds of the cattle in the definite area must sign a petition for the establishment of such an area under the plan. The petition must be forwarded by the Provincial Minister of Agriculture to the Minister of the Federal Department of Agriculture requesting that the necessary action be taken. The payment of compensation is based on the above limitations and maximum valuations provided under the Accredited Herd Plan.

SOME ADVANTAGES OF THE FORMATION OF A RESTRICTED AREA

It is the most practical and economical method for the Department and for the live stock owner.

It permits of organized systematic work in testing cattle and the shipping of reactors by car lots—the least expensive method.

The greatest number of cattle can be tested in a given period.

Greater permanent progress can be made in the control of the disease than by any other method, because all the cattle in a definite area are under official supervision. They are all systematically tested, reactors shipped promptly for slaughter, and all infected premises cleansed and disinfected. Calves born after entrance are easily located and the spread of infection controlled.

It provides the best possible protection to clean herds and gives the owners a feeling of security.

There is no necessity to enter schools fences to protect clean herds while at pasture.

It facilitates breeding operations as it is easier to keep pure-bred sires and herds of equal health status, and has a tendency to eliminate the scrub bull.

It prevents the introduction of new stock, and does not restrict the service of pure-bred sires.

It creates an active market at higher prices, as area cattle are in great demand. Buyers for feeders, markets demand tuberculin-free cattle, and select some of the best purchased there as they obtain the number desired more quickly and at less travelling cost in areas than elsewhere.

It provides a safer milk supply to all consumers in the area, and at the same time is an effective means of controlling bovine tuberculosis.

It results in increasing accommodation for cattle and better sanitary conditions generally, as our officers advise owners regarding desirable improvements.

More effective control and supervision can be maintained over our areas than under our single herd plan, as the movement of cattle into an area is governed by regulations.

Area work promotes community interest and co-operation and has a tendency to protect the general interests in an area against any action which may jeopardize its health status.

It is popular with the stock owner, creates a ready market for our cattle, reduces the incidence of the disease, and is of importance to public health. It is essential to any live stock industry to maintain progressive control of bovine tuberculosis, and with the present knowledge the restricted area plan is the most suitable and effective means applicable in this country.

BOVINE TUBERCULOSIS

ORDINANCE REGARDING FORMATION OF RESTRICTED AREAS

Immediate loss due to the compulsory slaughtering of reactors.

Places the cattle owner under strict regulation as to the movement of cattle.

Makes it more difficult for men to drive in feeder cattle.

REGULATIONS REGARDING FORMATION OF RESTRICTED AREAS

1. Upon receipt of a request from the Government of any Province asking compliance with the provisions of these regulations the Government of Canada may, whenever it appears desirable to the Minister of Agriculture, declare any portion of the province of Bovine Tuberculosis from a restricted area, in the manner hereinafter provided.

2. Applications may be made to the Minister of Agriculture of the Province by the Veterinary Director General to conduct tests under the regulations of the Health of Animals Branch.

3. Reactors to the test shall be marked for identification and shall be disposed of by slaughter under inspection forthwith.

10. Whenever in carrying out this order, it is necessary to slaughter an animal, or animals, by the direction of tuberculosis from a herd, the animal, or animals, unless otherwise provided, shall be valued and compensation awarded in accordance with sections 14 and 18 of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

11. Compensation will not be paid for reacting grade bulls, or animals affected with lumpy jaw.

12. The feeding of animals within a restricted area on by-products of cheese factories, skimming stations and butter factories is prohibited unless the said by-products have first been sterilized by heat.

13. The Minister may order the quarantine of public stockyards and other areas for the assembling and marketing of cattle, located within an established area from the provisions of these regulations.

14. All premises and contact matter infected, or suspected of being infected with tuberculosis, shall be thoroughly cleansed and disinfected by and at the expense of the owner or occupier, in a manner satisfactory to an inspector.

15. An area (county, municipality or district) in which the percentage of tuberculosis in slaughter animals does not exceed one-half of one per cent (0.5) shall be declared by the Veterinary Director General an accredited area for a period of three years, and upon a percentage of cattle infected with tuberculosis does not exceed two-thirds of one per cent (0.3) it shall be declared an accredited area for a period of six years.

Note: "Co-operation on a purebred basis will not be paid for reacting animals over one months of age not registered at the commencement of the tuberculin test.

RESTRICTED TESTING

There is tabulated evidence to show that in ten years, under the restricted area plan, the percentage of reactors drop tremendously. Just as on September 1, 1930 square miles in the Fraser Valley, B.C. involving 48,000 to 50,000 cattle, 6½ percentage of reactors fell from 7.2 per cent in 1926 to 0.2 per cent in 1937. There are numerous other similar examples.

HASTINGS LAKE

THE FINALE

Some slight good is always wrought, Beyond self-satisfaction,
When we are simply good in thought, Its essence we find in action.

And so a toast—
To what the Jones cherish most,
They ought to know fried foods aren't right,
But since they both I suppose they might.
Come to love it as they do
To think that "meal" when work is through
It's always willing, quick to heat,
For frying eggs it can't be beat,
And in their eating a art
Fried eggs play the vital part.
Fond me the Lone Sex if you can,
Who does not love an frying pan,
So to what they now and tomorrow bring,
Their real link a frying pan—a toast!

It baffle some, it had to blow,
The Lone Sex paper did sink,
They'd like to play a game at Lome,
But the girls don't show the rink.

It is said that a woman must always have the last word in an argument. If that is true, then it must follow that if the Tumbleweeds were to get into an argument with the Advance, then the Tumbleweeds would never be able to stop talking.

The boys lamented.
The girls said, "Lets put on a play,"
That's a treat."
They staged "The Path Across The Hill."

The Tumbleweeds.

P.S. Hillbillies pl-ease note! If on a still, silent night you hear a rumbling hear a bit of Aulde Scotlande descending upon you, don't be alarmed. It is just Mr. Donald Kyle tuning up his bagpipe. If winter comes, Spring—oh hasten!
Whatever I've men't about the weather.

The postponed Whist and Bridge Party given by the Community Club Hall on Wednesday last was not exceptionally large, owing no doubt to the fact that it was not well enough advertised (Ed. Efficiency note!) another boost for advertising.) Anyway those present enjoyed themselves and up some nice sets of both bridge and whist. The winners being: Bridge—Ladies' 1st, Mrs. Scott; Gent's 1st, Sandy Scott; Ladies' Consolation, Mrs. F. Eastman; Gent's consolation, Chas. Olsen. Whist — Ladies' 1st, Mrs. Strangeridge; Gent's 1st, Mr. J. Gill; Ladies' consolation, Mrs. Stine; Gent's consolation, Jas. Beauregarde. A dainty lunch was served after the games and was very much enjoyed by all and the night ended in singing. Taking it all in all it was a very pleasant affair and deserved to be better attended and will be held on Friday 24th March, so be on hand to join the fun and help the Fund.

Divine Service was held at the School last Sunday. Rev. Mr. Tugwell officiating, assisted by a friend who is a lay reader in All Saint's Cathedral in Edmonton. Eighth Installment

SYNOPSIS

When the wealthy Paine parents of Marjorie Wallace suddenly die she finds a letter telling that she has a twin sister, that she was adopted when her own parents couldn't afford to support both of them, and that her real name is Mary Alone in the world, but coming to fortune of her own, she considers looking up her own family whom she has never seen. A neighbor, Dan Hosmer, tries to argue her out of it, and tells her he loves her and asks her to marry him. She promises to think it over but decides first to discover family. She goes to Brentwood, finds that they are fashionable and socially prominent, but in many things they need. When in her room alone she hears a voice, apparently coming from the next room, and overhears a conversation between Mrs. Hosmer and her husband, the subject being Mary. Mary decides to come to the same academy where Jane Hosmer is attending, and although she has never met her before, she feels a strange affinity for her. Jane is very much interested in the new girl, and invites her home before the first term closes.

Mary has a successful first term at Brentwood Academy, and is invited home with Jane for the holidays. Mrs. Hosmer is very cold to Mary, but Jane's father is very kind. Mary is very much interested in Dan Hosmer, Jane's brother, who is expected home for the holidays. Mary receives a letter from Dan telling her that he is coming home for the holidays, and that he is bringing a friend with him. Mary is very much interested in the friend, Dr. Ralph Bruce, and looks forward to meeting him.

Mary and Jane are sitting in the living room when Dan and his friend arrive. Mary is very much interested in Dr. Bruce, and is very much disappointed when Dan tells her that Dr. Bruce is engaged to be married. Mary is very much surprised when Dan tells her that Dr. Bruce is engaged to be married to Jane Hosmer.

SYNOPSIS

When the wealth, foster parents of Marjorie Wethe of both die she finds a letter stating that she has a twin sister that he was adopted when her own parents couldn't afford to support both. She's sure that... Fay real name is Dorothy Gay Alcott at the world and with a fortune of her own she is living up her own family name in Brentwood. Marjorie's twin sister Fay Baker refuses to argue with her and tells her she has been brought up to be married for him. She decides first to see her family. She goes to their address, finds that they are destitute... gradually persuades them to accept things they need. When they decide to see her in their city she realizes that he seems particularly interested in her sister. Marjorie goes to church in Brentwood, where she is... and falls in love with... Fay's brother Lee Baker, who is... trying to make some money... Marjorie finds that Fay has... and that her family... to pay back... Fay starts... she offers her... pay on her husband's debts and gives the real estate... Marjorie about making the real estate... Marjorie about making the deal.

She was soon on her car speeding toward Brentwood rapidly.

After she had got over the bewilderment of discovering the man to... was Mr. Parley without the... she was they were about to leave.

"Well, now I may as well tell you, I am Mr. Gay's daughter I was away for several years during the time my father died and I had never met... colonel Mr. Gay... in all the excitement through her, and tried to put her sister... of my father having given up the house of course, and I knew... how they had left it. I have been wondering if there is any way by which my father can recover the house Can you tell me that I want to... and what we could recover it?"

The man's face fell.

"Oh, in that case you had better see Mr. Horgan He has charge of all those cases. But I am quite sure the mortgage was foreclosed.

"I was not speaking of putting a mortgage on the place I was speaking of paying cash. As I understand it my father had only lapsed in his payments a short time. If he were ready now to pay up all obligations, and lapsed in... up as possible — though in reality she was very much scared — "I will see that you have a certified check for the full amount within the week."

Marjorie knew about certified checks She knew their power.

Mr. Horgan became quite at ease "I would have to talk this matter over with my partner, of course, before actually closing up the business but in this case, I don't think I should do short it, and I shall either return sometime this afternoon for your answer, or send a representative of my Chicago lawyer to talk with you."

Marjorie, still holding her head high sailed out of the office coolly with only a... little smile for the stenographers... almost afraid to have something go lest it was being a dream and then he said—"Well, we'll go and see Mr. Horgan."

Mr Horgan was an elderly man with gray hair parted meticulously in the exact middle and thin lips that seemed prone to give an admonition. He looked over... Marjorie's air of assurance, that impressed the estate man, who had been having a hard time himself just now. He decided at her... minute questioningly and then he said—"Well, we'll go and see Mr. Horgan."

"Oh, not at all," said Mr. Horgan with a smile in protest, "I was merely interested to know how sure a thing it was that this would be,

"If I decide to do this thing," said Marjorie, drawing herself to her full height and trying to act as grown up as possible — though in reality she was trembling with excitement, "I shall have to suppose that your... would pay for obligations now due, plus... and... closing up her own family affairs. I am Fay Baker's sister, you know, and I am going to argue with her... if and tells her he loves her and... and he is happy with me. "Of course," said the lawyer, thinking he knew pretty well that she would like to be married before long, and would have to consult a certain young man before she made any decisions, but he did not voice any such idea, "I just thought I'd mention it."

"Thank you, Mr. Melbourne. And—please, Mr. Melbourne, you won't let anybody, not anybody, I mean, know about this matter of my buying this house. I don't see that it's anyone's affair but my own."

"Certainly not, child. You can trust me for that."

"And, Mr. Melbourne, there's just one more thing. Would you have any connection in this city that would give you information to get an agent," for my father somewhere here? He's very much discouraged. He had a very fine position and lost it. He is an expert accountant!"

"Indeed? What was the name of the firm, do you know?"

"Hamilton, Melver and Company," said Marjorie, glad that she had remembered to ask Ted that yesterday.

"You don't say!" said Mr. Melbourne. "They had a fine standing. I should say there ought to be something pretty good somewhere for a man they employed. I'll see what I can find."

Five minutes later Marjorie turned from her expensive telephone call with satisfaction. Mr. Melbourne had been just as kind and helpful as she had known he would be.

She took another taxi to the Federal Trust Company Building and found to her joy that Mr. Bryant was in and had just been talking with the Chicago lawyer, so her way was smoothed for her at once.

Marjorie was delighted with the kind interest he took in the matter and promised to return to his office at three o'clock to learn the result of his interview with the real estate company.

She went on her way with a lighter heart now, summoning her wits to remember all the things she wanted to buy.

First of all she had it in mind to get a warm lovely negligee for her mother, and comfortable pretty slippers to go with it. Then she began to go to the credit department, opened a large account, giving her Chicago reference, and went to the next floor and found a squirrel coat for Betty that was almost an exact duplicate of her own.

Passing the millinery department she found a little velvety toque that with a bright dash of pheasant's feather would suit Betty's taste, and who was sure it would be becoming to Betty.

After that it didn't take much time to select a warm house coat of soft wool for Mrs. Bryant, a pretty vest for Ted, and a thick, warm sweater for Budd with a bright Scotch plaid to match the color of the cloth collar. Then she was off to the telephone booths to call her lawyer.

She found a better report than she had hoped for. Mr. Bryant had looked up the records of the transaction at the time the lawyer had considered his generosity, and found more than one commendation of the perspicuous would not care to have brought to light by such a lawyer as William Bryant, so he had succeeded in bringing them to accept a reasonable sum for both payment with interest, and the transfer of the property was not going to cost very much to get possession of it before Christmas if I can, I shall need several thousand dollars at once and I would like to have them in my own bank in this city where I could draw on it in a couple of days. Would it be possible?"

"I suppose it would," said the lawyer, "I could look it up for you today. But are you quite sure this house is a wise buy? It's my business, you know, to advise you in such matters."

"I know," she said, "but I'm quite sure about this. And even if it were not a wise buy I should like it. But Mr. Melbourne, of course I know I'm not very experienced in buying real estate, and I have a tendency if there isn't some lawyer in this city in whom you could recommend me, who would take charge of this transaction for me? I think perhaps those people who have lived there are a little tricky."

"Yes?" said Mr. Melbourne. "Well, you certainly should have someone whom you can trust to look after the affair. I'm not practising, there's William Bryant. He's in the Federal Trust Company building. I will call him up right away and ask him to look after you. Could you go to his office at noon? Are you right, if I phone about you?"

"Oh, thank you, Mr. Melbourne!" said Marjorie in a relieved voice.

"And by the way, Marjorie," said Mr. Melbourne, "I don't suppose you have any idea of selling your Chicago property, have you? Because I have a very good offer for it last week."

"Oh!" said Marjorie a little breathless, "I hadn't got that far yet. I don't — quite know what I am going to do."

A BILL TO AMEND THE HAIL INSURANCE ACT 1936
Background

Following the cessation of operations by the Hail Insurance Board in 1936, the farmers of Alberta were, for two years, without hail insurance protection under governmental which compares most favorably with arrangement. The hail Insurance Act, as it stood in 1936 was drafted and passed, therefore, in meet an emergent situation applications for insurance and the work had to be completed claims for loss. Inclusive. Collections hurriedly in the closing days of that totalled 90.71 per cent of premiums season in order to put the necessary Under such efficient administration administrative machinery in operation at once it would be impossible for the Board, The Act of 1936 constituted a new de- as at present constituted, to fail as parture in the field, because it did its predecessor The purpose of addition it being a mutual arrange- the administration now is to keep the most of it provided farmers against present Board operating to care for a loss of their operation costs rather special need of the farmers and if it than against loss. If there possible is to be maintained, there be profits. This new idea, which limited use its protection will have to pay the insured a production costs to $5 their premiums per acre, and removing selling per acre, and removing selling. The present Act was drafted hastily methods that policies were sold to during the last session of the House over 150,000 farms returning a and, as would be expected, the new premium of $613,561.02 and a result for several changes has arisen total risk of $7,115,126.11 — the out of the experiences of the past largest number of hail insurance business ever written within the province since 1921.

Purposes

The Amendments to the Hail Insurance Act of 1938 are now proLast year was little short of du- pounded for consideration by the Legisrastrous as far as the new concern- lature in order to clarify sections of ed, four years been installing $613,614.71 the Act which have been found to were paid However, care had been practice to be either vague or unworktaken to cover a wide distribution able and to give to the Board a better opportunity to carry out the policies laid down by the government. The Amendments will help greatly to keep administration costs low, and, by strengthening its foundations, ensure further against any possible circumstance which might threaten the continued operation of the Board.

Highlights

The Amendments will establish beyond dispute that:

1. The farmer's crop will be insured from the day his application is received by the Board unless another applicant has already insured the same parcel or parcels.

2. Farmers with several parcels to insure will be able to ensure all of them with an initial payment of $5 to cover all. Previously an initial payment of $5 was required for each parcel.

3. Regulations relating to cancellations will be clarified. Under the new Amendments farmers will be permitted to cancel their hail insurance when their crops have been damaged to such extent by crop conditions that the Board would not pay for loss from hail. Cancellations will be permitted upon the recommendation of a representative of the Board that action has been made. However, the Amendments will ensure that there will be no cancellation after the Board has carried the risk over the most hazardous period.

4. Liens to secure payment of premiums may be taken against the farmer's entire crop. Previously a lien could be taken against only the insured crop and, although rare, some cases have occurred in which it was apparent that farmers claiming the crop was destroyed by hail obtained payment for crops from insurance companies against which there were unsatisfied liens.

5. Farmers may obtain release from their liens when they have sufficiently good reasons but penalties will be imposed upon persons destroying insured crops without ensuring that good possible will also be imposed upon persons improperly buying insured crops without ensuring that the liens against them have been released.

6. To facilitate adjustments, losses must be reported to the Board within three days of the damaging storm. Claims for losses must be filed with the Board not later than October 15th of each year.

7. Farmers will not be compelled to settle on the first adjustment but, if they want to, may appeal again. They must file their complaints within five days of the first adjustment.

8. Farmers will be protected against default to the foregoing by a regulation which ensures that they will receive from the adjuster a copy of every adjustment giving the extent and amount of damage.

9. Damage claims will be paid in equal proportions on November and March. Persons holding assignments against such payments will be required to file their claims with the Board prior to October 1 and February 1. The date for the remittance of the Spring payment has been advanced from April to March 1 in order to have the business of the Board completed before the end of each fiscal year.

CANADA RANKS HIGH IN MINERAL OUTPUT

From a relatively minor position only 25 years ago, says an article in the current issue of the Canadian National Magazine, Canadian mine production and export of mine products have risen to the place where Canada now ranks as one of the principal sources of supply for many of the most important minerals of present day industry.

Practically every province of Canada has part in the Dominion's great mineral production. Three provinces, however, Ontario, British Columbia Quebec, contribute 88 per cent of the total, or 95 per cent of the metal production. Two other provinces, Nova Scotia and Alberta, are responsible for 75 per cent of the fuel production. Seventy-five per cent of the non-metallic production other than fuel is from Ontario and Quebec.

"Mah brothers," said a Negro preacher, "when yo' hears Gabriel sound his horn yo' wants to be ready to jump."

"Mah goodness," exclaimed one of the congregation, "am he comin' in an auto?"

Wife (apologetically): "I took the recipe for this cake out of the cookery book."

Husband (tactfully): "You did quite right, darling. It never should have been put in."

AS THE THOMS KNIGHTS AROUND THE TABLE

The foreman at the logging camp,
"Twas where the hardwood logs are felled,
Said to the men, "the news is bad,"
He showed the paper that he held.
"Boys, I hate to tell you this,
You've worked so well and true,
But no more sticks are needed.
It seems that we are through."
At the factory where the sticks are made,
The men thought the boss too stern,
But orders were given, the saws had come,
All wheels had ceased to turn.
Even the dainty little girls,
Who put the soup fishes in the box,
Became strangely quiet when they heard the news,
No more need for scanners and cans.
And so all over the western plain,
Where sheep in thousands thrive,
The bent old sheppard leaned on his crook,
The news had been slow to arrive.
He knew the time was not far off,
When the sheriff would cease to ride over the plain,
On his galloping steed in a cloud of dust,
To take away his little claim.
No more woolens would be needed,
At least not for another year;
A gnarled old hand caressed his brow
And upon his weathered cheek there fell a tear.
What thought had they for one so old?

OF INTEREST TO POULTRY RAISERS

A meeting addressed by government experts and illustrated with moving pictures will shortly be held in Tofield. The meeting is purely educational along poultry lines and all those desiring to keep abreast of the times as regards poultry management should watch for further announcement. It is hoped to form a poultry breeders association.

Even one who had toiled as he?
His eye wandered ov'r his little flock,
Out there where the winds are free.
The news was bound to unveil far,
Spring at last had come to the hills,
The "Jims" had dried and hung up their skates,
And had paid the last of their bills.

MINISTIK

Mr. Henry Heitman passed away at the Oliver Hospital March 31st. The Funeral service was held on Monday at 2 o'clock in the Ministik Hall interment took place in the South Cooking Lake Cemetary. Mr. Heitman was an old timer in the Ministik district, having resided here for 32 years.

Hammers and saws have been busy this last week at the Ministik Hall. Result being comfortable seats in the building, now we won't mind how long the storms are, there will be no danger of falling off the seats, if we do happen to go to sleep.

Mr. Garland spoke to a very appreciative audience at Ministik Hall on Saturday, on the C.C.F. platform, a resolution was presented and passed protesting to the Federal Government, the minimum price of wheat set at 80 cents at Port William and Fort Arthur basis No. 1 at least. We urge every farmer and farm woman to write Minister of Agriculture, Ottawa, resolutions are not enough, you must all do your share in this regard if we are to get results. So write now. Another resolution endorsing the resumption of Wheat before Mackenzie in Canada in case of war was presented and passed.

Mr. Ivor will attend church service at the school house on Sunday April 9th at 2 o'clock.

Henry Heitman would like to thank all those who helped, also those who sent floral tributes to his father's funeral.

TENTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS

When the wealthy foster parents of Marjorie Wetherill both die she finds a letter stating that she has a twin sister, that she was adopted when her own parents couldn't afford to support both of them and that her real name is Dorothy Gay. Alone in the world, but with a fortune of her own, she considers looking up her own family, whom she has never seen. A neighbor, Evan Brewer, tries to argue her out of it and tells her he loves her and asks her to marry him. She promises to think it over but decides first to see her family. She goes to the address, finds that Mrs. Gay died last year and gradually puts together the pieces of things they said. When she tells Gideon she is really the mother she claimed to be, he is instantly interested in her sister Marjorie, who is living in Brentwood, where they have lived for years, and comes very much interested in the young man she has been going with. She then goes over to the house to see Marjorie, who is not at home, but she meets Evan Brewer, who tells her that her family had moved and he promised to keep it a secret. Marjorie returns and tells Evan she has purchased it in order to give it to her sister as a Christmas present.

"Well, I should say not!" said Evan with a catch in the last word like a sob.

Suddenly a flood of happiness rolled into Marjorie's heart. This was her Evan, whom she loved dearly. They loved her!

Mr. Gay came in a little after the shocking scare but with a strange new manner upon him, a new softness. Marjorie, being in a happy mood herself, realized what a hard thing it must be for him that he could earn nothing to support his family, and wished with all her heart that something might come of her request to the lawyer about a position for him.

It was not until the second day later that Mr. Bryant sent Marjorie word that he had the papers ready for her. So Marjorie, amid a host from the children, started off early in the morning again.

To Marjorie the day was full of excitement. It was so good to know that the matter of the house was going through all right and that she would carry home with her that afternoon the deed which she might sit up in the grandest Christmas wrappings for her father and mother.

Mr. Bryant told her that Mr. Malbourne had told him about her father, and he had been looking up several good openings that might materialize after Christmas. He didn't tell her that he had been commissioned to look up Mr. Gay's record and had found it absolutely up-to-date, both as to ability and character, but he was sorry that he spoke of her father with the respect and it showed in her heart.

"Do you suppose it would be possible, if there were an opening, that the old man as an office for some- where and not have him know that I asked about it?" she asked the lawyer shyly. "I think he would feel better about it that way."

And he seemed to understand for I'm smiled and said

"I should think that it might be arranged."

So she went on her way to complete her shopping in a very happy frame of mind.

And then, right in the midst of the last few purchases when should she spy, across square upon but the young man. As she saw him coming toward her, Gideon Brewer looked after she reflected how utterly "in" the mind, a quick color flew changed was for life. But in a moment to recognize anybody . . the big strange city."

He seemed so pleased as she was. He paused and talked to her a moment, told her how much he thought of it in his childhood when he had been alone among strangers, desolate and going to be, and then he hesitated before, and looked down at her wistfully.

"I was just going into the tea shop room to get a bite of lunch," he said, "I wonder if you wouldn't join me? Its lonely eating all by myself especially in the midst of those gay Christmas crowds. It seems to emphasize one's loneliness."

"Why, I'd love to!" said Marjorie, with a sudden unreasoning feeling of having been reserved. She followed to have Gideon Brewer see her. But, of him through the Christmas throngs to a table in a corner where there was comparative quiet.

Marjorie, of course, had often been set to lunch with her young men friends, but somehow this seemed the rare experience of a life time. How silly she was! This man was an utter stranger All she knew about him was that he could preach an interesting sermon, and her brother adored him.

So she relaxed and enjoyed her lunch and the pleasant talk that went on with it.

"I have been wanting to ask you something," she said at last as the dessert was placed before them and the waitress hurried away again. "Perhaps this isn't the place to talk about such things, but I would so like to know something."

"I'll certainly be glad to help in any way I can," he said.

Well, then would you tell me please, how can you tell whether you're saved or not? I'm a church member of course. But is there a way to be sure one is saved?"

"I have never all" said Gideon, his eyes lighting eagerly

She met his gaze earnestly.

"Sunday in your sermon you talked a lot about the new birth, and I don't understand it at all. I've always been taught that if I was good I would go to heaven when I die."

"So was I," said Gideon smiling, "but that is not true."

Marjorie gave him a startled look. "Then because the law must be kept perfectly to be a means of salvation, and no one but Christ ever has or ever could be perfectly good, so it would be hopeless for us if they were the only way to Heaven. But thank God it isn't. We have the very word for it! Do you believe the Bible?"

"Oh, yes, of course, I don't know as very much about it," she answered, "but I believe it."

"Do you believe its gospel: that Jesus was nailed to a cross for you, taking all the penalty of your sins and by enduring that terrible punishment upon them?"

"Yes, of course, I believe that."

"Well, do you believe that because He did that God raised Him from the dead and exalted Him to the highest heaven?"

"Yes, indeed, I believe that although I never heard it stated in just that way before."

"You believe, then, that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God?"

"Why, certainly."

"Well, then listen to what this says."

He took a small testament out of his pocket and opened to 1 John 5:1. "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God."

The astonishment on her face changed into illumination as she took in the wonderful truth:

"Then I am saved!" she exclaimed, her eyes softening with the wonder of it.

"Yes it is so simple as that," said Gideon, his eyes drinking in her eagerness.

Suddenly Gideon glanced at his watch, and looked startled.

"Excuse me," he said, "I have a wedding in half an hour and I'm barely time to get there. I'm afraid I'll be how the time was going May I do you again sometime about this?"

"Oh, I should love to have you," said Marjorie. "I have almost nothing about the Bible!"

"You'll have to begin to study it now." He smiled as he turned to the waitress to get the check. "I'd love to help if I may."

And he seemed to understand for that may help at the start. I'll send it over to you."

"Thank you," said Marjorie, "I didn't have to rush away. You've given me a wonderfully pleasant hour."

"Oh, no! you've shown me an interesting way to spend it. I had" said Marjorie with shining eyes.

As she took her way home as how she reflected how utterly changed was for life. But in a moment she was at the house. He was standing in the living room talking to Betty. He was her about a certain little girl

Friendship

If nobody smiled and nobody cheered,
And nobody helped us along;
Each individual looked after best;
And the good things all went to the strong;

Each carved just a little for you
And nobody thought about me;
If we stood all alone in the battle of Life—
What a dreary old world it would be.

Life's cemetery because of the friends we have made
And the things which is common we share,
We want to live on, not because of numbers
But because of the people who care.
It's giving and doing for somebody else—
On that all Life's splendor depends;
And the joy of the world, when it's all added up,
Is found in the making of friends.

The Wheat Situation

The tense international situation caused by the swift German occupation of Czechoslovakia resulted in a brief strengthening in wheat markets. This was largely due to a hurried rush for cover on the part of "short" sellers. As the seriousness of the situation were felt prices dropped back again.

The market is in a rut from which it seemingly can only be loosened by some sensational happening.

News from the United States winter wheat belt in the mid-west suggests that the crop there is in a much improved condition over what was anticipated. In the United States government report last December abandonment of from 20 to 25 per cent of the acreage seeded was suggested. A fairly favorable winter may reduce this figure appreciably. Crop reporters state that the mid-west winter wheat area shows indications of a most vigorous start. There is a big difference even in fields adjoining each other. There is a lot of dust in the air and a good deal of moisture in areas will be injured.

All kinds of reports are circulating regarding borrower ag.-vements of wheat for other products. Argentine is said to have made a deal with Germany to exchange 25 million bushels of wheat for manufactured goods. Rumania also is reported to be engaged in developing a deal involving 50 million bushels of wheat to Russia for machinery.

World trade last week totalled $1,164,000 bushels, of which North America supplied 3,214,000, Canada's share being 2,814,000.

Canadian visible stocks of wheat totalled 145,208,241 on March 30th, of which 132,000,000 are in elevators, four million bushels were stored in country elevators and 9,208,241 were at Ft. William-Port Arthur terminals and 7 million in Vancouver and Prince Rupert.

The weather on the prairie has been favorable. Most farmers have cleared Southern Alberta of snow over the week-end. Reserve moisture conditions are good in the south and central regions and fair in the south.

And Now Hitler Wipes Out Scouting in Czechoslovakia

In Boy Scout circles now and the final dismem'-brument of Czecho-Slovakia by Germany brought special regret. It means that another world government still Scouting in that little country, as he did in Austria. Czech Boy Scout contingents have in the past always been popular visits at the World Scout Jamborees. Their camperaft displays have included many interesting and original ideas, and they have contributed creditor! numbers to the folk dances and pageants. Their national dress is unusually picturesque. There has been one of the most attractive and best illustrated European Scout publications coming to Canada in exchange with the Canadian official Scout monthly. Its many beautiful reproduced photographs have pictured the Czech types of boys, physically and mentally, camping, hiking in the mountains with pack on back, frequently spending their holidays with parties from Canadian and American Scouts. It is hard indeed to think that they have sacrificed to the German god of militarism—that under German pressure they may conceivably some day be directing Hitler Youth camps or heavy Skoda artillery against Canadian lads with whom they happily entertained at international Scout gatherings.

Shades Of Salem Witches

March 27.- Daniel Driscoll, railway road clerk and the Central Vermont Railway, recently sheepishly cancelled that Salem, Mass., in the old days" was noted for its witches he set out to expound a mail sack from Salem not properly addressed. Inquiry revealed puzzy was the reason of the Salem postal workers and had been misusing several days. She apparently choose the mail sack as a resting place and the next day when she was enroute to St. Albans on the "Ambassador" train she noticed the return of the travelled litten to her Salem postal friends.

Bring Giant Ants For Study

Boston, March 27.- Two thousand giant carnivorous ants from the jungles of Brazil and British Guiana arrived in boxes that were locked securely in steel trunks, were brought here recently by Prof. A. Zahl of the Haskins laboratory, Cambridge, Mass., aboard the Canadian National liner "Evangeline Hawkins." They are the first live specimens of the dangerous, greedy ever brought to the United States and will be taken to the Schenectady laboratory for a study of their social habits. The giant ant are two inches long and have wings and are believed to be the largest ants in the world.

Cause and Effect

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By H. G. L. Strange, Director "The Crop Testing Plan."

A despatch from Bucharest tells us that Roumania has signed a most extensive trade treaty with Germany. Roumania has agreed to make available to Germany 20 per cent of her surplus of wheat, (which surplus last year amounted to 25 million bushels), other agricultural products and oil.

In exchange for this, Germany agrees to furnish to Roumania agricultural and mining machinery, and other goods that the Roumanian people now need. The exchanges will be on a free trade basis.

It will be seen that almost complete free trade now exists between Germany, the former Austria, what was Czecho-Slovakia, and now Roumania.

This will certainly result in raising the standard of living of all the people in this large European area.

As these benefits are realized those freer trade agreements will be developed, perhaps over the whole of Europe.

Where then, one might ask, will stand these countries, such as Canada, Australia and the United States, which now hold large unsold surpluses of food stuffs, and which countries are curtailing the sale of their dollars by restricting the importation of other countries goods. Would it not be wise in time, to note that the writing on the wall, and to make the distribution of surplus food stuffs easier by lowering those high tariffs which now strangle international trade?

Following four factors have tended to raise price:- Demand from China extraordinary; Argentine crop disappointing; Australian crop disappointing; Canadian visible stocks small.

Following factors have tended to lower price:- European emergency stocks depress values and prevent normal demand; Liverpool importing Brazilian flour; War risk marine insurance; Negligible European wheat demand; Heavy Liverpool wheat stocks adequate for limited demand supply; Winter crop in fair or good condition in main continental producing countries.

That Additional Touch

By Francis Lee Burton

A pound of wool is merely wool unless someone can spin it. A cake isn't nothing but a cake without some currents in it. Don't bring me lamb without mint sauce. It will not grab me much. Even edibles are served to me I crave that extra touch.

Remember that additional touch. Parsely on the steak, lemon for fish, horseradish for cold meats, raisins in the rice pudding and currants that turn a plain cup cake into a luscious morsel that registers as "sugar" at dinner or for that before-bed bite.

Currant Cup Cakes

2 cups sifted cake flour
2 teaspoons double-acting baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1-2 cup butter or other shortening
1 cup sugar
1 egg, unbeaten
1 cup currants
½ cup milk
½ teaspoon vanilla

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift together three times. Cream butter thoroughly, add sugar gradually and cream together until light and fluffy. Add egg and currants and beat well. Add flour, alternately with the milk, a small amount at a time, beating after each addition until smooth. Add vanilla. Bake in a greased cup cake pans in a moderately hot (375 degrees F.) 15 to 20 minutes, or until done. Makes two dozen cup cakes.

160 ACRES OF LAND FREE—

THIRTY or forty years ago, from highly colored and large posters was "flashed" the message—160 acres of land FREE. The posters, generally depicting a prosperous farm scene were displayed in Eurcpe. on bill posting stations, steamship company offices, railroad stations, in fact anywhere likely to catch the eyes of the people, in the hope no doubt that a number of them would emigrate to people the vast Canadian prairie. In a country where the possession of land is the exception rather than the rule, the sign, 160 acres of land free, had tremendous pulling power and tens of thousands turned their eyes westward and embarked upon a new career in a new country. It was a genuine offer and to some it proved a gift of the gods. Land, financial success, independence, things in the old land they had barely hoped for and hardly ever expected to get. To all the offer meant toil, even to those who were destined to handsomely succeed, but to the great majority it meant unceasing toil, their ultimate reward being freedom and independence rather than financial gain. The story of the west is the homesteaders' story. Of a beginning with stout hearts and empty hands. A story of living in sod or log shacks, plowing with anything obtainable. Long hauls to market, fighting the forces of nature, living, experiments without a whimper, in short, conquering nature for the benefit of man. At times when the frost was thick on the window pane and stove covered the ground, the gayly lithographed message, 160 acres of land free, so alluring back home, seemed like a ghastly joke. But with each new spring new hope was born and a determination to avoid replacing any qualms as to a mistake in life's endeavor having been made. There were failures of course, many of them, but gradually, by courage and hard work, virgin territory was converted to rich agricultural areas and those handsome lithograph pictures were duplicated in reality many, many times.

Now the day of land free is in Alberta gone for ever. And with the offer goes a glamorous even if tollsome period in Alberta's history. The government no doubt have well studied the problem thoroughly and know that all land is not good farm land and to make it so is an impossible task. So there has been inaugurated a leasing system which while lacking the appeal of 160 acres of land free, will probably work out better in the long run for settlers on virgin land. How much an improvement the new system is over the old will depend entirely upon the terms of agreement between any intending settler and the government. We are not enamored of the 20 year lease arrangement believing the sooner the settler owns his land without any strings attached the better. But it is good that virgin land be OK'd by responsible authorities before settlement takes place. We like the purchase arrangement after ten years, the best. Ten years though seem a long time to be leasing when a settler really wishes to own. The price clause in this respect is very fair, the price agreed upon being set at the time the lease is signed.

Despite its drawbacks of allowing settlers to go on unsuitable land, the old homestead arrangement had one good point in its favor. It was a case of first come first served. There were many incidents of people standing all night in order to be first at the land office when it opened in the morning. The idea of standing all night might not be a good one but the principle involved is good and we would like to see something of the same kind incorporated in the leasing arrangement.

However it is assumed that changes, even though they mean passing into the discard land settlement procedure which in the past has been responsible for much rich in achievement, are on the whole an improvement.

Lacking any better tag,
We're calling it the "paper bag."
The "paper bag" is worth its weight

Load it up with eggs or sweets,

Eggs For Easter Long Tradition

The origin of the Easter egg tradition is lost in antiquity but years after year the delightful custom of adorning the breakfast table with eggs on Easter Sunday morning continues. It matters not that the first fresh eggs no longer come with Easter, the beginning of Spring. The modern model of the humble hen may and usually does, produce her small out product the year round. Easter is still associated with eggs, with the hen scratching in the warming earth, newly aware of her destiny.

Eggs, in the Easter tradition, are always boiled in the shell. For children, of course, they must be colored, with one of an infinite variety of home or commercial preparations. No parents, interesting children, memories of bowls of multi-colored eggs on Easter morning, would deny a similar pleasure to their children. Hard boiled, is a ground cupcake pans in a moderately hot (375 degrees F.) 15 to 20 minutes, or until done. Makes two dozen cup cakes.

Summary Of The Provincial Lands Act

Background

During the early days of settlement in Alberta a system of homestead-ing was instituted under circumstances to which hardships of farming conditions was not available fully to the settler involved in the Government. Under it many settlers took up land without knowledge of soil or weather conditions, with the result that many areas unsuitable for farming were sold to the plow. The result, judged by experience, have proven disastrous particularly in the drought areas where which many settlers have had to be removed. A statement issued by Mr. J. Harvie, Deputy Minister of Lands and Mines, shows that prior to March 1, 1939, 24,000 homesteads and soldiers' grants have been granted since the government took over the natural resources on October 1, 1930. During this period, more than 19,000 entries have been cancelled and abandoned either the lands or the settlers were not suited to agriculture. During the period referred to there was an increase, set, of approximately 5,000 grants but, for the same reasons, even some of these are not operative.

Purposes

The proposed amendments will enable the Minister of Lands and Mines to dispose of unoccupied land in Alberta. They will enable him to encourage settlement of areas close to existing highways and social services and only on land suitable for agriculture. Under the amended Act, lands will be given to agrarians who will live on them and cultivate them. The idea of the amendment is to replace the homesteading system with a long-term leasing arrangement with an option to buy.

Highlights

Under the amended Act, lease of not more than 320 acres, half of which must be fit for cultivation, will be granted for the term of 20 years, renewable for a term of another 20 years and thereafter renewable for further terms of 20 years, providing the settler meet the requirements of the lease.

Rentals will be nominal and fixed by the Minister. Rentals on cultivated lands will be on a crop share basis and rentals on non-cultivated land will be on a per acre basis.

The Applicant for a lease must be 18 years of age or over, and be a British subject, or become one in six years. Each applicant must agree to erect a house on his lease; must break, summerfallow and cultivate his land as required by the terms of the lease, and such lease will be drafted individually according to the circumstances.

The applicant, after a term of 10 years may buy the land or surrender at a price to be determined by the Minister when the lease is issued. That is to say, that, if the purchased is contemplated, a clause to this effect and stating the price of the land, must be included in the lease when it is drafted.

Under the amended Act, as to the lease now, school lands may be only disposed of at public auction, but if school lands offered at auction are not sold then the Minister, during the next two years, may sell such lands by private contract at a price not lower than the upset price. The lone not prevent the Minister from leasing short-term cultivation leases as at present on school lands.

Many features of the old act deal-ing with details of land settlement are carried forward, into the amended Act which gives the Minister far reaching powers in connection with the administration of the lease holder contract; provisions for eventualities arising; and the essential impunity of the lease holder and his family.

FEDERAL GRANT TO REMOVE CROSSINGS

Campaign for the reduction of accidents at level crossings in this province has been empowered in various quarters.

During a recent debate in the legislature Premier Aberhart suggested that every car should be required to come to a full stop at a safe distance before proceeding over a level crossing.

A recent dispatch from Ottawa tells of the dominion government's appropriations for the 1939-40 fiscal year, including a lump-sum of $1,000,000 for the elimination of the grade crossing across the dominion.

Last year there were five deaths in car accidents at railway crossings in Alberta, indicating the need for greater educational work along safe driving lines in this province.

Active in the interest of safe driving, the Alberta Motor Association has on many occasions urged dominion and federal governments to do all possible in eliminating the dangerous level crossing, where numbers of accidents occur each year.

102 New Acts Given Approval By Legislature

When the Alberta legislature prorogued on Monday night, it had added 102 new acts to the statutes of Alberta.

During the session, 105 bills had been introduced, but three of these had been "killed," including two dental acts and one to control the occupation of hairdressers in this province.

One of the main bills of the session was the new Alberta Marketing act, which provides for the formation of a provincial marketing board, and the establishment of commodity or industrial boards. This act took effect up a receiving royal assent. The government as estimated a revenue of $50,000 more than this year during the 1939-40 fiscal year.

The house also passed a new bill authorizing the government to enter the fire insurance business, competing with private firms. This act also came into effect upon proclamation.

An act giving the lieutenant-governor-in-council power to fix prices of petroleum products in any area or zone, also was passed by the legislature Another act provides for the regulation of pipelines for petroleum and petroleum products, and provides for those being declared common carriers. Both acts are based upon recommendations in the interim report of the Mellitzer royal commission.

Ranking also of first importance with the major acts of the session was the new provincial lands act, which replaces the old homestead system in this province with a new leasehold system. This provides for 20 year leases of crown lands up to 320 acres, and renewals for 20 year periods, while a lessee is entitled to purchase the property after the lease has run ten years.

Bruins Debt Act

Another of the major acts was a measure to amend the Judicature act. Under this bill, there is provision for the cancellation of a debtor's liability on a personal covenant.

POULTRY MEETING
NEXT WEDNESDAY

A meeting of much interest to poultry raisers will be held at the Varsity Theatre, Tofield, on Wednesday next at 2:00 p.m. The meeting will consist of addresses by government experts and will be illustrated by moving pictures depicting vital parts of interest to poultry men and women.

It is the aim of the promoters of this meeting to form a worth-while poultry organization in this district and they are hoping for a good turn out. Poultry raisers are advised that this is their last opportunity to form such an organization as meetings such as this are in great demand and a poor attendance will be taken as evidence that poultry organization is not desired here. This is an effort to improve poultry flocks together with the status and profits of poultry raisers. Remember Wednesday afternoon at 2:00 p.m. at the Variety, Tofield.

Artizens act also was passed by the house, following the action of the dominion government in recently discallowing a similar measure passed at the 1938 spring session. The new bill provides for debts incurred before July 1, 1936, being outlawed after July 1, 1942, unless an arrangement between debtor and creditor has been made in the interval.

The house passed the redistribution bill, reducing the membership of the legislative assembly from 63 to 57. In this reduction, Edmonton and Calgary will each have five seats in the next legislature instead of with six each at the present time.

A bill to amend and consolidate the Bureau of Relief and Public Welfare act, was also passed by the house. Various sections of this bill were based on recommendation of the special relief committee which investigated relief complaints last year.

Prairie Fur Board

Another of the main measures of the present session was the Special areas act, which provides for administration for the drought areas by a permanent board of three members. The board will have charge of the administration of four units in the special areas.

Volunteers bill which provides for a consolidation of the Canl Mines act, also was passed by the house.

The house also passed a bill authorizing the government to establish a rental purchasing agency. Another of the bills provides for a teacher's pension scheme to be brought into operation in this province, commencing Sept. 1, next.

An act providing for cancellation of $4,140,200 of municipal indebtedness for agriculture advances, from 1917 to 1922 also was passed by the house.

Various changes in the voting system were provided for in the bill amending the Elections act. A bill authorizing the government to establish public livestock markets also was passed by the house.

A dance was put on at the school here by Messers R. Heichen and H. Tucker. It was very well attended and all present enjoyed themselves. The proceeds are to be devoted to the Building Fund of the Community Hall so we hope they were of generous dimensions.

April looks as if it would rather be January this year but we suppose we will warm up some time before October.

At a well attended meeting at the Variety Theatre on Wednesday afternoon a new poultry organization for Tofield district was formed.

The meeting was addressed by C. W. Turner, Poultry Commissioner and H. M. Hargrave, poultry marketing expert. A number of very interesting and helpful talks were delivered by the work of poultry organizations in Edmonton as well as on many other interesting subjects related to poultry. It is hoped that a strong poultry organization formed here and that since its work will at only include matters connected with the raising and care of poultry but matters connected with marketing also. This has for years been a weak point in the poultry industry as applied to poultry keepers here.

Eleventh Installment

SYNOPSIS

When the wealthy foster parents of Marjorie Wetherill both die she finds a letter telling that she has a twin sister, that she was adopted when her own parents couldn't afford to support her, and that she is living in small town Dorothy Gage. Alone in the world, but with a fortune of her own, she considers looking up her own family when she has never seen Anne Vaughan, Evan Reaver, who is to argue her out of it and tells her he loves her and asks her to marry him. She promises to think it over but decides first to see her family. She goes to their address, finds that they are destitute and gradually persuades them to accept things they need. When the doctor calls to see her mother she notices that he seems particularly interested in her sister. Marjorie goes to church in Brentwood, where her family used to live, and becomes very much interested in the minister. She visits with him and later has lunch in the city. While at Brentwood she meets Evan Reaver, who is formally introduced, buys food for them and gives the food to her father on Christmas morning.

It was a long time before the Gay family simmered down to real life again. Betty was just taking the turkey out of the oven and Marjorie was filling the inner glasses when there came a ring at the door again. Ted went to open it and there stood Gideon Reaver with a small white package in his hand. It wasn't tied up in ribbons or seals like a Christmas present, though it looked as though it would like to have been, for it had a rubber band around it.

Ted welcomed the young man jovially.

"Come in!" he cried as though Santa Claus himself had appeared at the door.

"No, I mustn't," said Gideon amiling. "I just stopped in to leave this little book for your sister. I told her I'd send it over and this is the first chance I've had. Also I wanted to ask if you folks wouldn't come over to Betty's Christmas evening at nine o'clock."

"Oh, come on in," said Ted, "I want you to meet Dad and Mother. You aren't in such a hurry you can't stop a minute, are you?"

"No, I'm not in a hurry at all!" said Gideon smiling, but I don't believe in intruding on Christmas Day."

"Intruding!" said Ted, opening the door wide and pulling his adored pastor in. "Where do you get that word?"

Then he suddenly turned and caught the look on Betty's face as she came into the dining room and, quickly opposite the hall door, with the great brown steaming turkey on its platter.

Ever after Ted like to tease Gideon Reaver in' Betty would be sure that probably Christmas would be all right just Poor Ted! He could hardly get through the introductions.

But Marjorie came shining into the room and welcomed the guest, and Ted felt better. Then his father and mother were both very cordial too, the minister who spoke first. At this time f Betty and the turkey in the background.

Betty put down the platter and gave a startled frowning in the hall his coat, but the frown suddenly died down Betty was surprised to find always to find always and good-looking Ted's but I'm not always sure which the minister was!

"I'm just delighted to see you all," he said with a comprehensive glance which took them all in, "but I'm not going to stop now, I can tell by the delicious odors that are going around that dinner is on the table, so I'll just run away now and come back another time and call if I may. For he it from me to delay a Christmas dinner!"

Suddenly the mother spoke up, almost eagerly it seemed.

"Why not stay and share it with us?" she asked. She had seen the eager look in her boy's eye.

"Yes, do stay," said the father heartily "I know everybody will be delighted."

"Oh, I couldn't think of intruding that way. Indeed I couldn't. I was just passing and thought I would leave the message."

"But you haven't had your dinner yet, have you?" challenged Ted wistfully.

"No, I'm just on my way back to my boarding house."

"That settles it," said Father, "Ted go and see if there are enough chairs to go around, and Betty, put on another plate!"

But suddenly the front door which had the night latch left off, opened again, and in walked the doctor.

"Well, now, upon my word, if I haven't walked in on a party!" he said, "I beg your pardon, I won't stay but a minute, I just wanted to make sure my patients were all right and fit for turkey."

"You're just in time!" said Mr. Gay happily. "Have you had your Christmas dinner yet?"

"Well, no, I haven't yet, but I'm used to waiting. I'll just look at Mrs. Gay's pulse and then I'll be moving on."

"We'll call it brunch then," called out Betty suddenly from the doorway. "Come in, there's plenty to eat. You get the chairs, Ted. The turkey is already on the table. The more the merrier."

They all turned and looked at Betty's gay face, as changed from a moment before. Ted brandished a sigh of relief, and the two green spots forthwith glowed at its center.

Mr. Gay introduced the minister and the doctor and they studied each other a bit cautiously. But they were both rapidly liking their new acquaintance that.

"Dinner is served!" said Betty, suddenly appearing in the doorway looking very pretty indeed in Marjorie's green best dress with a bit of red ribbon inserted in her hair and a crimp of bully on one shoulder.

"It's going to be a tight squeeze, friends, but we thought it was better than waiting to set another leaf in the table and eating a cold dinner."

Betty's cheeks were rosy and her eyes were twinkling She seemed like a new Betty to Marjorie.

The doctor, without waiting on the order of his going, marched straight over to Betty and pulled out her chair, and then took the one next to her. Mrs. Gay rushed and took her place where the cushions had been arranged at her back and foot. The minister found himself seated between Marjorie and Ted. Then Mr. Gay's voice broke into laughter of getting seated.

"Mr. Reaver will you ask the blessing, please?"

Marjorie stifled a quick look of surprise. There had been no asking of blessings so far in the meals she had eaten in her new home, although she reflected they had been most informal, and her father had gravely and quite spontaneously returned thanks. Her heart warmed to the words they were spoken and she thrilled at the sweet silence that had ensued over them all. This minister certainly was a rare one. How great for Ted to have such a man for a friend!

As the heads were lifted the doctor shot a quick keen glance at the minister across from him. But it was the minister who spoke first.

"Do you mean to tell me, doctor, that you can always tell which of these twins is which?" he asked looking from Betty to Marjorie at his side.

"Well," said the doctor, "I can always tell that this one is Betty, but I'm not always sure which one the other one is!"

They all laughed heartily at that.

It was a delightful occasion, and everyone enjoyed it to the full.

Strange to say neither doctor nor minister seemed to be in a hurry to leave.

By this time they were excellent friends and talking everywhere at points of tastes in common. The doctor had inquired where Gideon preached, and Gideon had suggested that he had better come over his way and open an office. The doctor had asked a few about it, and Betty told him they were going to move back there and needed to have their doctor handy. He said he didn't know but that he would look into it.

Suddenly Gideon turned around to them all.

"Now, why don't we have a little song?" he said. "Christmas isn't complete without carols."

It was just as they were singing the last line of "Silent Night," that Evan Reaver walked contemptuously up the narrow steps, and failing to identify the small insignificant doorbell in the darkness, gave a thunderous knock on the door.

Coming as it did into the sweetness of that "Silent, holy night" of song ago, it was somewhat of a shock.

Ted snapped on the lights and opened the door, and there stood a tall haughty young man.

"Does this happen to be 1066 Aster Street?" he asked.

Ted nodded gravely.

"Is Miss Wetherill here?"

"Wetherill?" Ted hesitated and was about to say no, then suddenly it dawned upon him again and he took a deep breath like one about to undergoal something precious and continued with dignity:

"She is." Then he added with what was almost haughtiness in his voice, "Won't you come in?"

Evan Reaver stepped into the house leaving the taxi throbbing outside, and looked about the tiny hall, and the equally tiny parlor beyond, seemingly like a warhouse out for bottle.

But Marjorie, her color deepening a little in indignation, came forward at once.

"Why, Evan," she said pleasantly, this certainly is a surprise!"

She presented them one by one to her boy were sitting down in the dooryard, and each bowed courteously, except the two their disappointment at the interlude in their pleasant evening. But Evan Reaver merely acknowledged the introduction by a level stare at each and the slightest possible bow instead of his head.

"And won't you come in and meet my mother?" went on Marjorie blithely, "since you haven't at all seen the room in back in Evan Brewer's house where he was going to father her or out.

Marjorie led the way to the court, and the Brewer reluctantly stepped a few feet nearer and inclined his head in the merest bow.

"I came," said he to Marjorie in a rudely lowered tone, "to take you home this evening. Can you get your wraps and go at once? Will you need to change?"

He glanced down at her pretty dress with disfavor. It was evident he was a part of finding her in this little insignificant house in a common neighborhood, and he should see her dressed for the evening! Christmas evening! Of all the nerve!

But Marjorie did not look embarrassed at his evident disapproval. She lifted calm eyes to his face, and spoking in an ordinary tone that she was not attempting in disguise, she said:

"No, I'm sorry, I couldn't go this evening. I already have an engagement for later in the evening, and this is our first Christmas together, I wouldn't break it up for anything."

"Really, Marjorie, I don't see that you are required to be busy all day and evening too!" Evan's tone was decidedly disapproving.

"Well, I'm just so sorry as I can be, Evan, to disappoint you, but it's impossible. If you had let me know that you thought of coming very long I would have told you not to count on Christmas at all as I already made other plans."

And then Evan turned and stalked haughtily from the room without speaking but the turned and to Mrs. Gay's direction.

But Marjorie, her color rising and her head a bit high, walked coolly to the door with her caller.

"Too bad, Evan, to have this ride for nothing, but it just couldn't be helped," she said severely, and smiled coldly upon him.

At the door he turned savagely upon her and said in a low growl:

"When can I see you alone? In the morning? Will you deign to lunch with me?"

"Why, yes, I think I could," said Marjorie considerately.

"Very well, I'll call you on the telephone. What is the number here?"

"Oh, we haven't a telephone," She answered brightly as though that were the most delightful thing in the world. "Suppose I just be ready when you get here will some. Half past twelve or one. Which will be most convenient for you?"

"Eleven will do," he replied coldly. "I'm flying back in the afternoon and I'm taking you with me. Better have your things packed and we can take them with us when we leave."

Another Instead

Sailing a small boat off the Isle of Wight, a Londoner fashed in his anchor in some rocks off Fishbourne at high tide.

He made the rope fast to shore and sailed home light, intending to collect the anchor at low tide.

In the evening he read the three miles from Ryde. Put the 30 pound anchor over one shoulder and the cable over the other, and set off back.

At the top of the hill he met a fellow cyclist coming in the opposite direction. The cyclist took one look at the anchor, another at the rope—and fled. Then in terms of awe: "Lumme, mate! Ain't you got no brakes?"—London Evening Standard.

This Month's Star Recipe

Lima Bean

(Limas prepared by this Recipe are even more easily digested)

2 cups dried Limas

2 tablespoonfuls butter or bacon fat

Soak Limas over night; then carefully slip the hulls off them (which is easily done). Place in cooking pan with only sufficient water so that after thirty to forty minutes cooking, the beans will be all but cooked dry. Add butter and other seasoning to taste. Cook preferably in heavy aluminum dish, kept tightly covered. This method will bring out the full nut-like flavor of the Limas.

Many of you have tried my monthly Star Recipes and found them entitled to the "Star". This month I have chosen an extremely simple recipe as my favorite — but with all its simplicity it surely is entitled to a place in the Hall of Recipe Fame.

All you need are a few dried Lima beans and some butter or bacon fat. Follow the directions carefully and you'll have a dish flavorous enough to please your most critical dinner guests — and healthful as well. Needless to say it is economical and exceptionally easy to prepare.

Try this recipe while dried Limas are plentiful during the season when and minerals are in season. Incidentally, remember that these beans are exceptionally high in food value, and are an excellent all-the-year-round.—BETTY BARCLAY.

Comments On The March Wheat Situation

The Canadian and the international wheat situation during the month of March have been uneventful. The world's visible supply has moved on to the usual markets from the usual sources, and the situation has thus remained astonishingly stable throughout the entire month. The trade world has been living down the past thirty-one days in a state of calmness between peace and war. Should war occur the demand for wheat would undoubtedly sharply increase and prices would rise considerably. Should the fear of war definitely pass, and peace be assured, then for a time countries would begin to draw up their accumulated war stocks and so would require to import less, then prices no doubt would decline.

In the long run, however, the settlement of international trade difficulties would unquestionably start a sharp increase in world trade that would quickly result in increased demands by the people of the world for raw materials, wheat and other foodstuffs, which they badly need. Vast sums, too, now being expended annually by countries for armaments would also be released for the purposes of building and constructing and other forms of trade, business and commerce.

Much, then, it could appear, depends upon the willingness and the ability of the statesmen of the world to remove these disabilities and difficulties from which some nations now feel they are suffering.—(Searle Grain Company, Ltd.)

Assistance To Farmers

It has the announcement was made that the present guarantee of 40 cents a bushel for No. 1 Northern wheat at Fort William would be reduced to 60 cents, many persons jumped to the conclusion that this would be all the assistance that would be given to Western farmers. The consequence was that members of farmers' who were contemplating purchasing better seed of rust-resistant and of other varieties became disheartened and cancelled their orders. The "Crop Testing Plan" felt that somewhere there must be an error, and that much more assistance to farmers was contemplated by the Dominion government than the mere 60 cents a bushel guarantee. The "Crop Testing Plan" therefore telegraphed to the Hon. J. G. Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture, and asked if he would make an explanation. In reply the Minister telegraphed as follows:—

To the Director, the "Crop Testing Plan"

"You may quote me as stating that every half-section farmer growing ninety acres or more of wheat in a township where the average production is fifteen bushels or less (which means that farmers averaging eighteen bushels would be included) would have received greater returns from the 1938 crop and average handling in 1938 than he did receive with the eighty-cent peg step. Every farmer understood up to four hundred acres would be better off if he grew up to that amount of wheat per acre and much better off from non bushels down step. Those in a district averaging from eighteen bushels up would not be so well paid per acre under the plan.

It is quite clear from this telegram that the 60th which will shortly be brought down certainly will mean considerable more assistance to farmers than the mere proposed 40 cents guarantee.—(Searle Grain Company, Ltd.)

Wit And Wisdom

Trunk Call

At the London Zoo one day last summer a crowd of people were watching the elephants taking different short rides.

Suddenly a small boy ran in the path of a oncoming elephant, holding out a bun for it. As the elephant thrust out his trunk to collect this offering, a female voice shrilled from the crowd:

Her: "It's hard to have a lot of debts that you simply can't pay."

She: "Oh, I don't know! It's worse to have a lot that you simply must pay!"

At a luncheon of newspaper men the following toast was offered:

"The ladies! Served only to the press in the discrimination of news!"—Southwest Tourist News.

"ELIMINATING" DISTANCE—

EVERY SO often an announcement is made regarding the "elimination" of distance. Speed records of Atlantic liners; mileage records of transcontinental trains; and over-night flights of aeroplanes across vast oceans. It is all very wonderful and goes to prove that we are living in an increasingly mechanical, chemical and scientific marvelous age. But it would seem that all these things, plus the marvel of radio, does not actually lessen the distance between peoples, but rather seems to increase it. There was never a time when, in spite of all the advantages of travel and communication, the peoples of the world were farther apart than at the present. Engineering skill have continued year by year to conquer distance, but as men's machines and bodies and voices came into closer contact, their minds seemed to recede. In the realm of man thought precedes action, and the world of thought is chaotic. Within the circle of great powers continental friction exists, so much so that men representing different schools of thought call each other "mad." And it is not only in the larger fields of national endeavor is the working of an almost universal unrest seen. National governments, large and small, seemingly have their political and financial troubles, some so bad as to create civil war, others have upsets of a lesser nature. The prevailing unrest have spread to individual life and provincial spheres and judging by the weekly newspapers we receive at this office, to municipal fields also. Whatever the cause of this unrest it springs from the world war, prosperity followed by depression, or individual blighted hopes, it is impossible to say. But whatever the reason there is apparently room for individual mental shockstaking. Times of economic stress have always created erratic thought. That is, bodies of people band themselves together for similar purposes or take over other problems demanding continuous attention, but there are few places in the world where life is a bed of roses. Here in Alberta the province is young yet still. Less than forty years ago men and women were coming to this province by the thousands. Hopes were high, energy and vigor was everywhere evident, comradeship was genuine. Of course mistakes were made, by individuals as well as by the different governments. Governments built too many miles of railroad or too many miles of telephone line. Individuals bought too much land or broke up too many acres, business men gave too much credit or expanded too rapidly. But in spite of the numerous mistakes, real progress has been made. Farms and homes, schools and churches, highways and universities, law and order, education and entertainment all came about in what was virtually virgin territory. This is genuine achievement. Narrowing it down to our own Cornhill Municipal District the same thing appears. Real progress has been made even though every move was not the right one. In international, national, provincial and municipal affairs, emphasis placed on the right moves present a different picture than when emphasis is placed on the wrong ones. One does not need to be unnecessarily docile to be just, nor is it wise to constantly dwell on the unpleasant things of life. The same sun, moisture from the same source, the same chemical elements combine to ripen our crops now as twenty, thirty or forty years ago, when hopes were high and comradeship genuine. We know that economic conditions are not good, that even progress has brought its responsibilities, but on the whole, despite some distressing circumstances, people have more and live better than in pioneer days.

Aeroplanes are now bridging geographical gaps unthought of a few years ago, is it not possible that a spirit of tolerance, goodwill and understanding could bridge men's minds, replacing harmony for discord, here and elsewhere.

APRIL FOOL

The daffodils imagined
That Spring had come to stay.
They put on yellow organdy
And played outdoors all day.

At night they slept so soundly,
They didn't even know
When April called back Winter
And covered them with snow.

But when they stuck their heads out,
All shivery and cool,
The sun bent down and whispered,
"It's just an April fool!"

May Color Tax Exempt Gasoline

Check-up on commissary who are employed, or hoped to, from the gasoline tax, is provided for in a bill to amend the Fuel Oil Tax Act which was passed by the Legislature of Alberta, at its recent session, it is pointed out by officials of the Alberta Motor Association.

For some time it has been claimed that the privileges of industrial commissaries paying a tax of one cent a gallon instead of seven cents, has been abused, in that the fuel is used in many cases for operating passenger cars when the exemption is intended to apply only to fuel for farming or industrial operations.

The legislature just passed by the Alberta house provided that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council may make regulations prescribing a specified color for fuel oil to be sold exclusively to persons who are wholly or partially exempt from payment of the gasoline tax.

Regulations also may be issued designating the persons who are authorized to sell colored fuel oil to those exempt from the gasoline tax.

For infractions of the regulations there is a maximum fine of $200 or in default, not more than two month's imprisonment.

The provincial government is considered to enhance new regulations, however, until the results of a similar scheme now in operation in Saskatchewan are known.

The Minimum Price

A Statement by the Alberta Board of Trade and Agriculture.

Under date of March 20th, 1939 the Alberta Board of Trade and Agriculture petitioned the Dominion Government to establish a minimum wheat price at such level as would not the producer his cost of production.

In such petition particular emphasis was placed on certain artificial disabilities imposed on the Western Grain Grower, which it was maintained entitled him and the West generally to a fair measure of consideration. Such artificial disabilities were included:

(a) Over-production due to subsidies provided by Foreign Governments, and the resultant depression of world prices.

(b) Artificially maintained scales of salaries, fees, and wages, that cannot lose their relation of every commodity or service the agriculturist buys.

(c) The fixing of grain storage and handling charges at levels in excess of those that would prevail were uncontrolled competition between grain handling corporations permitted.

(b) Non-competitive freight rates designed to maintain a standard of salaries and wages out of all proportion to the return afforded the grain or.

(e) The protective tariff.

It was argued that in view of the maintenance of such devices as those above referred to, that, as a measure of compensation, the grain producer is entitled to consideration by way of guaranteed cost of production.

It now becomes obvious that the Government will be called to remove the justice of this claim, in that the 30c recently submitted to the house providing a minimum price of 60 cents basis Port William for No. 1 Northern, is based on the relative market price rather than on cost of production.

It is therefore urged that all such devices (and more particularly the protective tariff) as serve to lessen secondary industry at the expense of agriculture, be removed, and that the Farmer be allowed to exercise his inherent right to buy where he sells — on the markets of the world.

Find Eight Cows Died From Poison

CORONATION, April 11.—Grasshopper poison spread on the land last summer was believed responsible for the death of eight cows on the farm of R. Kerr, of the Talbot district. At the time of the death the stomach contents were sent to the University of Alberta for examination.

Results showed that arsenic and a small quantity of formaldehyde caused the deaths. It is believed the arsenic was obtained in some form at the first of the spring and then dried on the grass eaten by the cows.

Cheese Thief Identified By Teeth Prints

AUSTIN, Tex., April 11.—A burglar who forced his way into a store at Pecan Gap, near Paris, Tex., smartly left no fingerprints because he wore gloves, but made the mistake of biting into a piece of cheese. State police said the man confessed today when confronted with a plaster cast made from the impression his teeth left on the cheese and another made of the subject's teeth.

75 Per Cent School Facts Said Quickly Lost

More than 75 per cent of routine facts learned by children in public and high schools are forgotten by them three years after they leave school, Dr. Ralph W. Tyler, dean of the school of education at the University of Chicago, told close to 500 teachers at the annual convention of the Alberta Teachers' association in the Macdonald Tuesday

Reason for this fact is that majority of the knowledge which pupils are asked to learn is not "functional" and not vital to the pupil's welfare, the noted educationist said. He was speaking on "Secondary School Experimentation in the U.S.A." Chairman of the gathering was Dr. W. A. Kerr, president of the University of Alberta.

He referred to 30 school tests gathered in all parts of the United States, when the late school theories of the University of Chicago and the Progressive Education association of New York were being tested.

"Today, in the United States people are coming to have more and more leisure time. They don't know what to do with it. It is the job of schools to train people and also to develop their intellects so that they will know what to do with their leisure when they have some," he told the audience of teachers.

He told the gathering that teachers have a responsibility in developing to the best combination of a pupil's character. He declared that greater emphasis should be placed on health education and on the mastery of self-education.

Tyler emphasized the need of democracy in its operation of schools to hold the interest of people.

On Saturday, April 1st the Ladies' Club closed their curling season with a Pot Luck Supper held in the curling rink. After supper the business meeting was held and the complete slate of officers were returned to office (i.e.) Mrs. A A. Beuree, Pres., Mrs. J. W. Chapman, Vice-Pres., Mrs. M. C. Hammond, Treasurer and Mrs. C. Patterson, Secretary.

Honors at Bridge were captured by Mrs. Rogers and Mrs. Schmaltz. This ended a very successful season, financially and otherwise.

One member of the Clive cast, Clarice Morton, is in his first play. Robert Hoskins, 19-year-old farmer declared the best actor in the Alberta contest, and Director Duffy traveled 2,000 miles for casewards. Clive is a town of 500 people, about 100 miles south of Edmonton.

SPRING IS IN THE AIR

The forces of winter are slowly relaxing their grip on the Northern Hemisphere. Vegetation that has laid dormant over the winter months is coming to life once again. The farmer is casting an appraising eye over his equipment, the housewife is making plans for the annual spring cleaning.

There will be changes in farm equipment and changes in household furniture arrangement of course. Replacements and disposals. Some people will have good used articles to sell, others will be on the look-out to purchase good used articles—some people will do both.

LAKESHORE

It was with the deepest regret that friends of the late Mr. Sherlock heard of his death at the coast last week. For a number of years Mr. and Mrs. Sherlock and family resided in the Lakeshore district where their fine neighborliness endeared them to all. Although it is almost two years since Mr. Sherlock left here, his passing gives us a distinct sense of loss — the loss of a loved and respected friend. Our sincere sympathy goes out to the bereaved.

The Yeamies visited Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Murray on Friday. Mrs. Murray accompanied them back to the city for the week end.

Mrs. W. P. Riley is up again after an attack of the flu. Mrs. Norn is still confined to her bed.

Mrs. T. E. Soule was a city visitor last week .

But love souls as theirs could not be stopped by barriers and amid the glamour of superb music and song, despite temporary rifts, it triumphed. The picture Rosalie is wonderful entertainment.

Cornhill Council Meet

ENGAGE NEW SECRETARY
COUNCILLORS' MEETING ALLOWANCE REDUCED
MAKE BUDGET FOR YEAR 1939

Council of the Municipal District of Cornhill met in regular session as the Municipal Hall on Monday and Tuesday, April 17—18. There were present: Reeve Walker, Councillors, Anderson, Coombes, Holmberg, and Bewhay.

Minutes of the last regular meeting together with accounts passed for payment were read and approved. Immediately prior to the approval of the minutes, Councillor Holmberg spoke relative to the appointment of the Medical Health Officer at a salary of $1600.00 per annum. He said the motion had been passed after he had left on the town for home otherwise he would have spoke to it then. He had never been able to understand why the council appointed a Medical Officer at anything like this salary in the first place. At one time it was considered pretty much as an honary position. Due to location his services covered a large area, without error from the appointment. He had studied other municipal financial statements and found while their rental and indigent expenses were more than Cornhill's their doctors fees were a great deal less. He quoted M. D. of Lloyd George saying that when they paid twice as much as Cornhill for indigents, Lloyd George's doctor's fees were not as high. He did not consider the municipality responsible for medical fees except in the case of indigents. He was not antagonistic to Dr. Law, he even felt that the present arrangement was satisfactory, but for best interests. He was of the opinion that if the present arrangement was to stand the Municipality should go back the way and engage a municipal doctor.

Considerable discussion ensued during which, without commitment, the sentiment seemed to favor a municipal doctor.

Councillor Holmberg then moved that an investigation be made relative to the M. D. C. agreement with the idea of arriving at a better solution if ideal possible.

A committee composed of Reeve Walker and Councillors Holmberg and Bewhay were appointed to investigate the above matter.

Mr. Grover interviewed the Council asking for their assistance re the Dominion Government, Provincial Government and Municipality Land Settlement Plan. He had come four years ago from the south where he had been dried out and hailed out, and after a year on the Plain Creek where he crop froze he has located on NE. 25-49-21. He makes assist. and recommendation from the Council in obtaining a government loan. He was married and had a family. Council felt that the boundary of his present location was too great for government, even though they recognized he had made a real effort to establish himself. They felt that a definite proposition regarding a suitable location should be made before they could consider help or recommendation for a loan.

Mr. H. Barrow interviewed Council re leasing the N.E. 23-50-20. This adjoins his quarter. He considered it worth about $10 per year. The taxes were just over $20. On the motion of Councillor Bewhay it was decided to lease Mr. Barrow the above quarter at $15.00.

Mr. Leslie Herndon interviewed Council regarding his application for position of chevaier grader man. Council promised to give his application consideration with the others they had.

Resignation of J. O. A. Letourneau as secretary-treasurer was then read. A short discussion then ensued relative to its allowing of the secretary-treasurer's resignation, and a minute authorizing this was looked up and read by the acting secretary. It is as follows:

June 6th, 1923

Moved by Councillor Stinson, secretary be authorized to make a charge of $1.00 per month for rent of Medical Office at anything like this salary in the first place. At one time it was considered pretty much as an honary position. Due to location his services covered a large area, without error from the appointment. He had studied other municipal financial statements and found while their rental and indigent expenses were more than Cornhill's their doctors fees were a great deal less. He quoted M. BRENTWOOD

By Grace Livingston Hill

SYNOPSIS

When the wealthy foster parents of Marjorie Wetherill both die she finds a letter telling that she has a twin sister, that she was adopted when her own parents couldn't afford to support both of them and that her real name is Dorothy Gay. Alone in the world, but with a fortune of her own, she consults a lawyer, her own family whom she has never known, and learns that her sister is living in her former home and is about to be married. Marjorie decides to keep her identity a secret for two days, during which time she will visit her family, before telling them she is their adopted child. Finds that they are desirable and gradually persuades them to accept things they need. When the doctor calls to see her mother she notices that he seems particularly interested in her sister Mary. Mary goes to church in Brentwood, where her family used to live, and becomes very much interested in the young minister there, with whom she later has lunch in the city. While in Brentwood she sees the home her family formerly owned, buys it back from them and gives the deed to it to Mary, who had always wanted it. The whole family moves there. Ryan Brewster finds Marjorie and she has lunch with him before they marry him and clearly shows that she is interested with him. She minister dreads approval of Evan's views on religion.

THIRTEENTH INSTALMENT

"Father, I don't mind," said Marjorie. "There isn't a soul among my old friends that I would actually break my heart about if I didn't see them any more ever."

There was a shocking in her voice and her father reached out his hand to her and on a love footstool by her mother's side and laid it on her head tenderly.

"We want you to be truly happy, and to have no regrets if you should decide to come and live with us. What we want is for you to go back to Chicago for a time and think the whole matter over. Will you do that?"

Marjorie was still a long time and then she looked up sadly:

"Yes, I'll do it if you will do the same thing. If you can honestly talk it all over with the other children, and decide whether you want me or not."

Her father looked at her mother, and they smiled tenderly over the loved head.

"All right!" said her father, "we'll agree if you will."

Marjorie's face brightened.

"Well, then I'd better get it over as quickly as possible. I've got to go back of course and see to things. I can come away without closing up or packing or anything. But I did want to get the Brentwood house cleaned and you moved into it. I would hate to miss that."

The father's face softened and then grew reasonable.

"Well that's nothing thing, agreed. Why don't want to do anything about that, Mother and I, until this other matter is settled."

The next morning after the breakfast with was done Marjorie wrote to the servants. She would be home sometime after New Year's. Then she had a talk with Betty.

"You and I should go shopping," she said. "I want to watch you buy some pretty things for yourself, and there are things the children ought to have."

Betty, nothing loath, consented

No they went shopping

They had a lovely time and bought a lot of fascinating things. Betty said it was Christmas all over again.

She looked very pretty as she was led for Marjorie who had gone to another part of the store.

Just then a long, lank, sallow youth with a dove-devil in his eye, and a loose handsome mouth, brought up standing before Betty and gave her a long admiring stare.

"Well, some baby-doll!" he exclaimed "Am I seeing right? Is this my one-time ex-laborer in Old Jamison's hosiery office, or is it some millionaire's daughter?"

It was Ellery Allen, who had been in the office where Betty formerly was. Her mother was taken sick. It was he to whom Ted had referred as a "poor sap".

He grasped her hand in a long fingering clasp that expressed as much as the languishing look in his bold black eyes.

Betty was delighted. Here was a chance to show off her fur coat where it would be appreciated. Here was a chance to impress the young man who hadn't taken the trouble to come and see her after she moved. She had never been quite sure that Ted had not had something to do with that.

But now here he was and taking in her changed appearance!

She lifted her chin proudly and smiled, and he let his eyes linger on her pretty face with an intimate glance that all the girls fall for. A kind of triumph filled Betty's heart. She hadn't lost her power over him yet.

"Well, beautiful, you're lovelier than ever. Where did you get the glad rags? Rooked or anything?" His eyes roved boldly over her garments as if he had a right.

"How about a date, Baby?" he asked. "Got anything else on tonight, or tomorrow night? Little supper, dance, and go the rounds of the night clubs? Lake to show you something new!"

Betty flushed proudly and her eyes sparkled. Ellery had never noked her before.

"Thanks, that's kind of you," she answered trying to feign an indifference she did not feel. It was going to be hard to have attention. Two young men in one week, even if one had taken her to church!

Of the two dates she preferred the night clubs.

Of course the Dunter was much higher class than Ellery, was only a subordinate with a very small salary, but she had always apparently yearned to see a real night club, and she had heard Ellery boast of his acquaintance with them. Besides, he didn't just know what free time I shall have the next few days," she said casually. "My twin sister is visiting me, I wouldn't feel like leaving her."

"Twin sister!" the young man's face deeply impressed. "Lend me to her! Is she as pretty as you are, Betty?"

"People say we are alike," said Betty with a toss of her head.

"All right, bring her along," said the Lochievar graciously. "We do not be out on a love footstool by her mother's side and laid it on her head tenderly.

"We want you to be truly happy, and to have no regrets if you should decide to come and live with us. What we want is for you to go back to Chicago for a time and think the whole matter over. Will you do that?"

REVOLVERS AND PISTOLS MUST BE REGISTERED

Owners of revolvers and pistols are reminded that all revolvers and pistols must be registered at once. The registration period commenced March 1st, and continues to July 1st, 1939. This registration of these weapons is compulsory under section 121B of the Criminal Code.

In cities and certain towns registration must be made with the chief constable of the local police force. Outside of these places revolvers and pistols must be registered at the nearest R.C.M. Police Detachment. Wherever possible registration is to be made by the owner in person and the weapon produced for examination by the registering officer. However, should such procedure impose a hardship on the owner, he may send the weapon with an agent for registration, or may notify the registering officer that he desires to register it by mail.

The owner, when applying for registration, shall also produce the certificate of previous registration.

If the owner of a weapon is not the holder of a permit to carry it upon his person, the revolver or pistol is to be wrapped in a parcel when being taken to the registering officer, not opened nor carried in the pocket.

A registration certificate is entirely separate from, and does not take the place of a permit to carry a pistol or revolver. Such permits are still required.

ANGLICAN JUNIOR W.A. RALLY

Recently Holy Trinity Junior W.A. was presided by Rev. Yonge and the Superintendent, Mrs. J. W. Robinson attended the Junior W.A. Rally in Edmonton. Memory Certificates were awarded to Lorna Scriston, Marjorie Bailey, Betty Weatherill, R. Bailey, Carl LeVier and George Weatherill. Ralph received a special prize for perfect 92 marks in this study book examination, while Lorna received the Branch prize with a mark of 94. The Juniors were again successful in winning the banner—the being the third consecutive win (last year they tied with Vermilion). Before attending the Rally in the afternoon all went shopping and sightseeing. Perhaps the greatest thrill being visiting the parliament buildings, not forgetting the museum and the steep climb to the dome. During the evening all attended the religious drama, "The King of Kings" in All Saints' Parish Hall at 6.00 p.m.

SPRING IS IN THE AIR

The forces of winter are slowly relaxing their grip on the Northern Hemisphere. Vegetation that has laid dormant over the winter months is coming to life once again. The farmer is casting an appraising eye over his equipment, the housewife is making plans for the annual spring cleaning.

There will be changes in farm equipment and changes in household furniture arrangement of course. Replacements and disposals. Some people will have good used articles to sell, others will be on the look-out to purchase good used articles—some people will do both.

A classified advertisement is one of the best methods of letting other people know if you have anything to sell or to locate the person who has just the thing you are looking for. They are efficient inexpensive publicity mediums, great little business producers. The rates are low—

LINDBROOK

"Thro' the courtesy of the Tofield Mercury, we will now give you a resume of the month's news" with apologies from your news reporter.

Firstly, to start where we left off with our last "resume", Mr. Jas. Scroggrie left for a holiday at the Coast, on the way he was taken ill, and finished the trip to Vancouver in much discomfort. He put in two days in Vancouver, chiefly in bed, hoping the malady would subside, but it didn't so he returned home after being absent only a week. Then after arriving home he went up to the Edmonton hospital for examinations and treatment and got a week end off, then returned home better than he was, but far from well and is now undergoing daily treatments at Tofield. The best, it didn't happen 50 or more years ago, oh Jim!, more's the Mighty, ah! how nice 'twould be!

Mr McKenzie has been in the University hospital, Edmonton, lately, suffering from chronic sinus, but is home again now and we hope O.K. soon.

This has been a very disastrous week for many here. The hot dry weather of April 29th, 30th and May 1st, badly helped to "feed the flames," several having lost heavily as a result of these bush and fence fires.

Mr. Tucker lost a granary with 80 bushels registered seed wheat, some oats and also a barn.

Messrs. Bullivan Anderson and Wiley and Geerts lost hay stacks.

Mr. Fred Dunn lost everything but his car.

One night Mr. L. Herndon was up all night fighting fire from his buildings, and good for him! he succeeded.

We hear also that the Franklin Community Hall was burned down, while this isn't in the Lindbrook district, many Lindbrook and Tofield district folk are pretty well acquainted with the place.

We were very sorry to hear that Mr. and Mrs. Wood lost his house and practically all his belongings in it, by fire, altho we understand this was not a bush fire, but something to do with the stove or pipes. Anyway, accidental.

If this weather continues it won't weaker if it doesn't get at $1.20, as one will have any, maybe the moisture and warmth we've got the growers must wise to the future weather and they got the peg up from 60c to 70c, knowing it would be the same anyway. Still there has been lots of wet Mays and June in this country and that's what counts.

L.C.C. NEWS

The April meeting of the L. C. C. was held at the home of Viola Preaon, Gladys Weatherill co-hostess. Eighteen members and six visitors were present. Visitors being Mrs. Anderson, Mrs. K. Lindberg, and Mrs. J. Lindberg, Mrs. Lancaster and Misses Logan and Robinson.

The Ball Call was answered by Information Please and it was astonishing to find how few really wanted to know anything.

The new committee for the year were formed as follows:—

Luncheon Committee: Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Bailey, retiring Miss Harden and Mrs. L. Gill. Music Committee: Thelma Lawrence, and Gladys Weatherill, retiring Mrs. Preston and Mrs. Logan. Executive Committee: Mrs. Hooper and Mrs. Anderson, retiring Mrs. Kortzman and Mrs. Burgoyne.

There was also an entertainment committee to be appointed monthly, for meeting commencement. Miss Harden and Mrs. L. Gill appointed for the month.

The membership Spread, Monte made by the members and put together by Mrs. Smith was displayed at the meeting and was very complimentary. Afterwards members names were put in the hat and Mrs. Mc-Heffey took the lucky ticket and as next meeting will be held at the lucky lady's home we all hope to see the new bob-sprout in me.

FOURTEENTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS

When the wealthy foster parents of Marjorie Wetherill both die she finds a letter telling that she has a twin sister, that she was adopted when her own parents couldn't afford to support both of them and that Her real name is Dorothy Gay. Alone in the world, but with a fortune of her own, she consults a lawyer about her own family whom she has never seen. A neighbor, Evan Bowyer, tries to argue her out of it and tells her he loves her and asks her to marry him. She promises to think it over. She decides first to run down to Brentwood to locate her family before they are disturbed and gradually surrender them to every things they need. When the doctor calls to see her mother she notices that he seems particularly interested in her sister. Marjorie goes to church in Brentwood, where her family used to live, and becomes very much interested in the young minister there, with whom she later has lunch in the city. While at Brentwood she sees the home her family formerly occupied, longs to live in it and gives the deed to it to her father on his coming morning. The whole family is very joyful. Ah week in Betty meets Ellery Albee, a man she used to know, who asks her to marry him. He is very rich. Marjorie refuses him. Betty agrees to go and stay with Marjorie.

Betty was disappointed too in the car he had bought. He had told her he had the use of a new car, but the one provided like an old tin pan as it rattled along. Somehow she hadn't expect that the evening was going to be as cheap as the car.

It had never occurred to her before that Ellery was coarse. She had always thought him very amusing, but tonight he seemed to select the most undesirable stories on his list to tell her and when she did not respond warmly to his mirth he looked at her sharply.

"What's the matter, Baby? Getting high-hat with your poor plod rags? You better get warmed over or you won't get down a little bit where I'm taking you. I've got a fella wants to meet you, some swell! Got millions!"

Betty was suddenly a little frightened.

"I thought I was going with you, Ellery. I didn't know there were other men along. Perhaps I wouldn't care to meet them!"

"Wouldn't care to meet 'em! What's gettin' ya? Wanta be a wall flower? You didn't suppose we were just goin' in sit around and hold hands all the evening together, did ya? I've got other girls to dance with. I can't just stay with you, you know."

Ellery didn't state that he was paid by the club to dance with other girls, but that was really the case.

"I think perhaps you'd better take me home again, Ellery. I don't think I care to go, after all."

"Aw, you gettin' cold feet, are you? Bet you don't get out of it now, sis! Baby."

"But I don't care to go with a stranger, Ellery!" she cried aghast. "I had no idea—"

Ellery saw that he was going to have trouble and he had no time for that, so he set himself to soothe her.

"Now, Baby, don't you worry! Its going to be marvellous! You and you wanted to see the north side and I've arranged to give you an eyeful."

Betty felt a strange cold draft about her heart. She was growing more and more frightened. Ellery strung his long arm around her shoulders and drew her up close to him, but she drew away again and sat up very straight.

"I'm afraid I don't understand, Ellery. I came to go, after all."

"Aw, you gettin' cold feet, are you? Bet you don't get out of it now, sis! Baby."

SNOW WHITE AND THE SEVEN DWARFS HERE SATURDAY

MAY 13th

What was rated to be the most wonderful picture of 1938, Walt Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," is presented by Sharpe Shows at the Variety Theatre on Saturday May 13th.

There hardly seem to be enough superlative adjectives in the English language to describe this great picture. Certainly most of them have been over-worked used. A simple yet absorbing story, depicted in gorgeous beauty, lilting music, comedy and tragedy with a happy ending, plus the delightful antics of Mickey Mouse all go to make one of the most delightful screen productions ever filmed. Ever since its first showing in New York it has created sensation after sensation and is now touring the United States as the Seven Dwarfs" on Saturday, May 13 Shows—4:00 p.m.; 7:30 p.m., 9:15 p.m.

We wish to thank Mrs. Worton, Mrs. Schmalz, Mrs. Malcolm, Mrs. Coutts and Mrs. J. Letourneau for the help they have so generously given us by entertaining at bridge. Also Mrs. Patterson for a very pleasant evening at piano at her home.

Just a reminder—Pass me now dies, and there are still a good many to come in. We know you mean to pay these, but we need the money now.

The grounds committee have been going full speed ahead! Next week should see the erection of posts and the fence completed. Then, oh boy! once we get the bush atop we'll be swinging our racquets on the good old tennis courts.

Here is one young man's bright idea. Why waste all the shavings from the pooled logs, when they would make a grand fire? Why a fire? Why coffee and coffee would go swell after the hard work the boys put in every evening at the courts. Let's hear from the social committee about this oh!

That's all—Be with you next week.

Thos. G. Barb, Registered Optometrist, will be at Tofield on Friday, May 12th, from 2:30 to 4:30. He will bring to Tofield for the first time his new natural color cast. Full city optical service without extra expense.

The Camrose Lutheran College Choir will give a concert at Bardo on May 14th at 7.30, under the direction of C. A. Rensing.

SPRING IS IN THE AIR

The forces of winter are slowly relaxing their grip on the Northern Hemisphere. Vegetation that has laid dormant over the winter months is coming to life once again. The farmer is casting an appraising eye over his equipment, the housewife is making plans for the annual spring cleaning.

There will be changes in farm equipment and changes in household furniture arrangement of course. Replacements and disposals. Some people will have good used articles to sell, others will be on the look-out to purchase good used articles—some people will do both.

A classified advertisement is one of the best methods of letting other people know if you have anything to sell or to locate the person who has just the thing you are looking for. They are efficient inexpensive publicity mediums, great little business producers. The rates are low—

Mr. Will Abernethy Passes On

A well known and respected figure of this community passed in the Great Beyond on Wednesday morning May 3rd.

Will Abernethy was born at Nebraska City, September 19th, 1863. When he was a boy his parents moved to Elk Creek, Nebraska. His early education was procured in the typical and colorful one room school of the eighteenth century. Later in life he became interested in rural journalism and made a deep study and did much rambling along those lines, continuing to purchase books up to a few months before he died.

As a young man he worked as a blacksmith for five years but returned to the farm in 1888, moving to Nebraska, the centre of the state. But he always kept a shop, working there in as a hobby and a pastime, adjunct to the farm and assisting neighbors.

In 1902 he was united in marriage to Lizzie E. Shaw and moved to Iowa and in 1912 the family moved to Canada and settled on the farm in Tofield district on which he resided and remained to the end.

Quiet reserved was he became a socialist, even though socialism at that time lacked the popular endorsement of recent years. He was a staunch church in early life but he severed connection with the church in later years owing to the attitude of the church towards conscription believing that the Sermon on the Mount was not in keeping with the teachings of Christ. He recognized that the Salvation Army performs the best rules.

He was a member of the Municipal Council for quite a number of years and was greatly interested in the welfare of the municipality to the last. A man of very strong convictions he was always willing to sacrifice popular approval for what he believed to be right.

He took a very keen interest in all co-operative and other movements aimed for the betterment of the district and gave freely of his time in many neighborhood activities. He leaves to mourn his loss, one son, George of Tofield; and two daughters, Mrs. J. D. Patch of Ardrossan, Wash. ington, and Mrs. F. T. Sherlock of Wallington B. C. Eight grandchildren and one great grandchild also survive, a sister and two brothers.

The funeral was held on Thursday, May 4th. Service being held at the home conducted by Sergeant E. K. Interment followed in the Anglican Cemetery. Additional features include Tobin the Edmonton Branch of the Salvation Army, assisted by Rev. Mr. Jeffs.

McKENZIE

On Thursday May 11th, a quiet wedding was solemnized at the home of Eric Anderson when Rev. D. E. Allen united Mrs. Edna Helen Henry and Eric J. Anderson of Tofield.

The bride wore a dainty dress of deep blue crepe satin with rust accessories and was attended by Mrs. Glen Bailey who wore a dress of Marine Blue Shour.

Glen Bailey attended the groom. Other guests were Mr. and Mrs. Jacobson, Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy and Lastly we having "Tonight the good fight."

LAKESHORE

Long a resident of this district, Mr. W. Abernethy passed away on May 3rd. He had not been in very good health for some time but was up and around till only a few days before his death. Mr. Abernethy was a neighbor who was always ready to help others and his passing will be keenly felt by all of his friends. His fine sense of righteous and conscientious kindly friendship leaves an inspirational memory with us all. He leaves one son and two daughters, to whom we extend our deepest sympathy at this time. The large attendance at the funeral last Thursday afternoon is a testimonial in which Mr. Abernethy was held by those who knew him.

The Lakeshore children attended the musical festival at Holden on Friday. Due to the heavy rain some which were unable to attend and those who did go arrived rather late, some of them being too late to enter to their classes. The chorus and other musical numbers were mimed several good voices, so that the children were rather disappointed in those gradings. But they thoroughly enjoyed the day for dramatization and was high lighted by the judge in that event. Those who took the responsibility of seeing that the entrants got to Holden, as well as the children's teachers deserve credit. They all did well considering the hard trip they had to get to their destination.

FIFTEENTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS

When the wealth, foster parents of Marjorie Wetherell both die she finds a letter telling that she has a twin sister, that she inherited half the estate, and that she is to support both of them. And that her real name is Betty Gay Alden by the world, but with a fortune of her own, she cannot, looking up her own family, where she has never belonged. A neighbor, Dean Bowen, tries to argue her out of it and tells her he loves her and asks her to marry him. She finds out that Betty is very beautiful, finds that she has delicate and gradually per-suades them to accept things they need. When the details call to see her mother she believes that she seems particularly interested in her sister. Marjorie goes to see Betty Gay Alden, where Betty is living in poverty and becomes very much interested in the young musician, with whom she later has been in the city. While at Brentwood she meets the home her family formerly owned, buys it back for them and gives the deed to it to her father on Christmas morning. The whole family is very joyful. Meanwhile Betty meets Ellery Alden, a man she seems to know, goes with him to a night club, becomes disgusted with the drinking that she sees on the way. She starts walking home alone and is picked up by the family doctor who happens to be driving by.

Betty Sheridan's face went white and his lips touched for an instant, but not lashes that lay on her cheeks.

"Child, I am glad!" he whispered. Then suddenly he drew his head to-gether from his tender pocket and softly patted her dry from tears.

"There, be said in a matter-of-fact voice, "we'll get going! The sooner we get home the less for anybody to worry about. Now, put your head down on my shoulder and rest and forget it. It's going to be all right! I'm to get out and what that friend of yours, but guess I'd better confine my efforts to getting you home. Now, cheer up, little girl, and don't try to talk about it. I'll do things up at home for you straighten up your face and put on a gay and we'll face 'em out, Ready? Here we are! Asher on Street!"

The door opened at once and a much excited face looked out behind it. For a while with anxiety. Marjorie in a most ideal way for a house to be furnished one could ever have, her eyes of when they saw the doctor was almost beaming.

"I brought her home. I hope you don't mind, Mother, but I was never certain, such excited Ted and Bud would be, and I thought you would want another woman around besides Mrs. Jones. Where's Dad?"

"Why, my dear, I don't think I have any feeling against them relaxing from its arduous strain there. In fact it would be lovely to And Marjorie put her arm around her sister and led her upstairs softly

Betty closed the door softly found herself in a dim hall, and spoke Mother dear, I'm thinking that it is a low shaved tone

"Marjorie, I've got to tell you that you were right, and I'm ashamed! I don't know whether it was a regular to me after you have thought it over right this I want to or not, but As for me I can't see that my mind even if it wasn't, exist. I can't quite the strange a particle."

Then suddenly they heard Mother, I never want to see me as long Gay's step at the door and all else as I live! And I mean it! I want to see was forgotten.

Ellery Alden again either! I'm He came in with a shining face, through with him!" he said, "I'm hired! fun, and I'm going to be married right Marjorie put her arms around her I great! It isn't a job, it's a position sister and kissed her lovingly. I'm head of the accounting depart-

Dear Mr. Gay:

Having known of your connection with the former firm of Hamilton, McIvor and Company and being in need of the right man to head our accounting department, we are writing to know whether you are at present open for a position, and whether you would like to come to our office for an interview. We assure the honors of two-thirty and hope to talk over our suggestions?

Hoping to hear from you at your earliest convenience,

"Gosh! George!" His wife hugged him, a look such as she must have given him on her wedding day, a look so full of trust and strength that at last his ability had received expression.

"Oh, Father!" said Betty her face all shining with relief and happiness.

Marjorie realized that she had understood till then how terrible it had been for her father, and also for the others, to have the beloved father out of a job like even heart was throbbing with gladness too But she wouldn't let them see how relieved she was, how thankful to the two lawyers who had helped to bring this about.

"And now, Mother, there's something I need your advice about," said Marjorie. "I'm not sure that you will like it. Possibly what you think I ought to do about something in Chicago."

The mother gave a quick startled look. Was this to be about the aristocratic incident young man who came on Christmas Day?

Now, put to have me bring any of it into your house?"

"Haste!" said Betty who was listening, wide-eyed. "I should say not! Why, Marjorie, Mother has empty rooms. I'd love nothing else since she went to Chi-cago but tell them wonderfully that house was furnished."

70 CENT PRICE HELD INSUFFICIENT BY ELEVATOR MAN

William McG. Scott, member of the North-West Grain Dealers' Associa-tion and a member of its Brachen delegation which waited on Premier King and the Federal cabinet at Ottawa, made the following statement with reference to the Government's extended wheat legislation:

"The change in agriculture legisla-tion, especially the increase in the base wheat price to seventy cents, are a partial recognition of the justice of the claims put forward by the Bracken Committee. I do not con-sider this price satisfactory, how-ever, as it is not sufficient to main-tain the wheat industry on the Prairies.

"The proposal to limit the price benefit to a maximum of 2,000 bushels delivered by an individual farmer is an arbitrary decision. It gives no consideration to the economic factors surrounding larger scale farm operations and will bear heavily on a large and a very essential class of farmers. Furthermore, if open market prices remain above 70 cents, these larger scale farmers will be selling their crops over 2,000 bushels in competition with the Wheat Board.

"Assistance to farmers with poor crops is a welcome feature of the legislation. It should be emphasized, however, that all these are emergency measures. The more permanent prob-lems have yet to be studied and solved, if possible before the next crisis, in order to relieve farm costs and es-tablish a dependable basis against recurrence of such emergencies in the future."

HOG CARCASS GRADING USEFUL INFORMATION

Carcass or rail grading means that, instead of selling hogs alive, hogs may be graded as carcasses after slaughter at packing plants. Hogs may now be carcass graded at any packing plant in Canada at the option of the buyer and seller. When hogs are offered for carcass grading, they may be bought and sold on either a live weight or a dressed weight basis according to the desire of buyer and seller. Carcass grading provides a more accurate system of determining value and quality, since the exact carcass weight is known. Also the general type and conforma-tion, proportion of fat to lean, back fat thickness, and quality of belly, can be more definitely determined by grading the carcass than by grading a hog alive.

The system of carcass grading and sale on carcass weight is designed so that it does not disturb any of the established methods of marketing. It is expected that hogs are de-livered by truck or railroad, and whether they are sold on the live basis or the dressed basis. Full in-formation for farmers on the carcass grading of hogs has been issued by the Marketing Service, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, and may be obtained free on postcard or form on application from the Pub-licity and Extension Division of the Department. There is information on identification of hogs, carcass grading certificates, statement of settlement, deferred settlement, price differentials between grades, settle-ment according to carcass weights, interests carcass weights, "cold" weights, corresponding carcass weights to live weights of live hogs, and other useful information here.

Wiltshire sides of desirable weight are 55 lbs. to 75 lbs.—any under these causes weaking 142 to 168 lb. All other carcass weights are undesirable for export. A reasonably safe weight range for live hogs of average yield is 190 to 210 lb. Close attention to the weight range for live hogs will yield the producer many extra dollars in immediate returns, and also contri-bute to the improvement of the position of Canadian bacon at the British market.

SPRING MAID-COURSE DISHES

By Betty Bowing

Cut down a trifle on your heavy foods or spring fever will pay you a visit. He is that tired, languid clap who drops in to advise you that you are eating too much and that your body engine does not require the fuel needed in winter. Serve a well-bal-anced main-course dish occasionally instead of several heavy hot dishes. Something like the following will be well balanced, delicious, nutritious, and quite satisfying.

Baked Limas

2 cups dried Limas
½ cup dried salt pork
½ cup minced onion
1 cup diced carrots
2 cups boiling water
2 tablespoons butter

Soak Limas over night or from 6 to 8 hours in water to cover, then drain. Put salt pork in a heavy fry-ing pan and cook 5 minutes; add onions and carrots and cook until tender. Add to the Limas and season well and turn into a casserole, add water, then brush butter into bits and place on top of Limas. Cover and bake in a moderate oven (300 F) un-til tender, 2 hours.

Limas en Casserole

2 cups cooked, dried Limas
2 cups milk
2 tablespoons flour
1 cup diced, chopped ham
6 thin slices bacon cooked until crisp

Put cooked beans into small pieces. Place a layer of Limas in a buttered casserole, sprinkle with salt, flour, bacon and pimientos; repeat. Cover and bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees F.) about 30 minutes or until milk is all absorbed. Serve from the casserole, garnishing top with strips of crisp fried bacon and strips of pimiento.

U. OF A. FARM YOUNG PEOPLE'S WEEK

Farm Young People's Week at the University of Alberta will this year celebrate the twenty-first anniversary when it is expected that some two hundred young men and women will gather in Edmonton during the first week of June. In retrospect, this annual event has grown out of the most successful projects of a provin-cial extension program unique for its scope and variety.

In 1919 the then Acting Director of the University Department of Ex-tension, Mr. H. H. Gnets, presented his annual report in six typewritten pages (the 1931 report was a printed affair of forty pages) which stated that a conference of a "Young People from Farming Communities" had been organized and conducted by the Ex-tension Department. The attendance that year was 105, limit of accommodation at that time. The report went on to state that the event, though in a nature of an experiment, was a complete success and the hope was expressed that it would be continued from year to year.

The program adopted for that first University week for Farm Young People has been more or less adhered to in the succeeding years including talks on Citizenship, English Lit-erature, Nature Study, Field Hus-bandry, Stock Feeding and Judging. Instruction was also provided in Poli Debate, Group Singing and Group Games. Visits were made to various points of interest as well as the Parl-iament Buildings.

During recent years this program has been expanded to embrace both modern needs and the improved fac-ilities now available. Various tests and competitions have been establish-ed and several valuable prizes are now offered by various organizations tak-ing an interest in this annual effort on behalf of farm youth.

The Committee has taken advantage of the circumstance of the royal visit to convene the week earlier this year to give the young people attend-ing the coming districts of Alberta an opportunity of seeing their Majesties when they pass through Edmonton on June 2nd. Ar-rival date is May 31st and departure day June 9th. The eight days of the Conference will be busy ones with lectures, laboratory work, discussions, visits to points of interest, recreation and recitals, concluding with a banquet, banquet and dance.

An interesting incident this year will be an exhibit of the young people group photographs taken annually of these attending since the first group was taken in 1919.

For application forms, or any fur-ther information, apply to the Dir-ector of Extension, University of Alberta, Edmonton.

Royal Engine for Record Run

Engine 2850 of the Canadian Pacific Railway's Royal Fleet — semi-streamlined Hudson type locomotive, word for locomotive construction—will haul the Royal Train from Quebec City to Toronto and 25 Canadian Pacific engineers, each selected for his record and safe-ability, will in turn handle the Canadian Pacific flyer on the record run. From the time the royal train leaves Quebec City May 19 until it arrives in Vancouver May 26, the engine will provide the power for the trip of more than three thousand miles, a run not heretofore carried on by any one engine on the North American continent.

Canadian Pacific engineers, fire-men, conductors and trainmen to a total of 120 men will man the Royal Train on the Company's lines, and an equal number select-ed with equal care will handle the Pilot Train which has been pro-vided for newspapermen, police and accompanying officials. The honor of being first engineer to pilot the locomotive of the train bearing Their Majesties King George VI and Queen Elizabeth on their visit Canada, however, goes to Eugene Cote, (Hime) chief engineer French-Canadian lo-comotive engineer who has 43 years' service with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Nearly 28 years ago when the late King George V and Queen Mary, then Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York, visited Canada, Eugene Lecleve was foreman on their train from Quebec City to Montreal. This time he will be engineer for the same run.

Locomotive 2850 is one of the new semi-streamlined engines built last year for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It weighs 262,500 pounds, more than four times as much as the original 60,000-pound engine, and has a tractive effort of 37,000 pounds as compared to the 13,000 pounds of No. 2850 is being care-fully checked for the trip and will be beautifully painted in royal colors for the tour over Canadian Pacific lines.

A Weekly Newspaper Published at Tofield, Alberta

W. Worton, Publisher

The following editorial was for R. G. Calbreth of the Portland Oregonian a Pulitzer award. It appeared in the Portland Evening Oregonian at Calgary Red, 1936. While written primarily for United States Citizens, its subject matter makes it of much interest to Canadians also.—Ed. T. M.

IN THIS LAND of ours, this America, the man we choose as leader does at no time uniform or in-signia to denote his constitutional position as Com-mander in Chief of armed forces. No member of his Cabinet, no civil subordinate, ever attires him-self in garments significant of military power.

In this land of ours, this America, the average citizen sees as little of the army that he has not learned to distinguish between a major and a lieu-tenant from his shoulder straps. When the Chief Executive addresses his fellow-countrymen they gather about him within handclasp distance. Goose-stepping regiments are not paraded before him. When he speaks to the civilian population it is not over rank upon rank of helmeted heads.

In this land of ours, this America, there is no tramp of military boots to entertain the visiting statesman. There is no effort to affright him with display of mobile cannon or of facility for mass pro-duction of aerial bombers.

In this land of ours, this America, there is no fortification along any of the several thousand miles of the northern border. In the great fresh water seas that partly separates it from another dominion no naval craft plies the waters. Along its southern border there are no forts, no show of martial strength.

In this land of ours, this America, no youth is conscripted to labor on devices of defense; military training he may take or leave at option. There is no armed force consistent with a policy of aggres-sion. The navy is built against no menace from the western hemisphere, but wholly for defense against that which may threaten from Europe or Asia.

In this land of ours, this America, one-third of the population is foreign born, or native born of foreign or mixed parentage. Our numerous "mi-norities" come from fourteen nations. The native born, whatever his descent, has all political and civ-er rights possessed by him who traces his ancestry to the founding fathers. The foreign born of races that are considered by some of them the principles they went them. We have "minorities" but no minority problem.

In this land of ours, this America, the common citizen may criticize without restraint the policies of his government or the aims of the Chief Execu-tive. He may vote as his judgement or his con-science advises and not as a ruler dictates.

In this land of ours, this America, our songs are dedicated to love and romance, the blue of the night, sails in the sunset, and not to might or to martyrdom to political cause. Our national anthem has martial words; difficult air. But if you want to hear the or-gan roll give the people its companion—"America the . . . of thee I sing." In lighter selections we are natur-" cosmopolitan. Unitedly we sing of Dixie or of L. way, where the tall corn grows, of Spring-time in the Rockies, or of California, here I come.

In this land of ours, this America, there is not a bomb-proof shelter, and a gas mask is a curiosity. It is not needed that we teach our children where to run when deathwishers darken the sky.

In this land of ours, this America, our troubles present is our prospective come from within—come from our own mistakes, and injure us alone. Our pledges of peace toward our neighbors are stronger than the ruler's promise or written treaty. We guarantee them by revoluting our treasuries, greater than the resources of any other nations, to up-building the industries of peace. We strut no armed might that could not be met by the same nation in our half of the world to fear us. None does fear us, nor arm against us.

In this land of ours, this America, we have illu-minated the true road to permanent peace. But that is not the sole moral sought herein to be drawn. Rather it is that the blessings of liberty and equal-ity and peace that have been herein recounted are possessed nowhere in the same measure in Europe or Asia and wane or disappear as one nears or en-ters a land of dictatorship of whatever brand. This liberty, this equality, this peace, are embedded in the American form of government. We shall ever re-tain them if foreign isms that would dig them out and destroy them are barred from our shores. If you cherish this liberty, this equality, this peace that is peace material and peace spiritual—then defend with all your might the American ideal of govern-ment.

Naturally!

During the World War, Sir Ian Hamilton was reviewing a detachment of cavalry when an officer passed by mounted on a former bakery horse.

A mischievous soldier, recognizing the animal, shouted "Baker!" The horse stopped stock still, and by no manner of persuasion could be induced to start again.

Things were reaching a rather painful state, when suddenly the officer had an inspiration.

"Not today, thank you," he called out.

At once the horse started forward, and all was well again.

THE WEEK IN EDMONTON

EDMONTON, May 8. — With the approach of summer Edmonton's thoughts of the travel-minded natur-ally turn to highways, and this week, Minister of Public Works W. A. Fallow outlined the road building programs which will be undertaken this season, under Dominion-Provin-cial auspices.

* * * * * *

A total of $665,000 will be spent on main highways. Of this sum, $160,000 will be spent on the Edmon-ton-Jasper highway as far west as the funds will allow. Mr. Fallow is hopeful that negotiations now pro-ceeding will result in a greater sum being expended on this section.

* * * * * *

Ottawa approved expenditures in-clude a dollar-for-dollar $560,000 for the central and southern parts of the province, and an additional $75,000 on improvements on the Grimshaw to the fifth parallel road, with the donation of assuming two-thirds of the cost; and out of the same grant, a road from Peace River to Dunvegan. The Dun-vegan bridge will cost $65,000 and the ferry $20,000.

* * * * * *

The $560,000 will be spent on the following projects: Calgary to Cross-field, reconditioning and seal coating, $125,000; Crossfield to Red Deer, first course, $122,000; Pusoka to Millet, seal coating, $40,000; Waterton Parks to Okotoks, second course, $100,000; Medicine Hat to Walsh reconditioned and finished to grade, $60,000; Redcliffe, surfacing, $79,000; Monarch to Leth-bridge, reconditioning and surfacing, $40,000 and from Edmonton west to Jasper as stated.

* * * * * *

Boom producers have something to feel about, in the announcement of A. L. McLean, President of Canada Packers, who stated on Monday last that Canada has a "tremendous" market in Great Britain to thrustom-ize a record of thirty-seven million pounds of vegetable oils foremost in the federal budget. "In addition the proposed tax may give Canadian farmers something less than $1,000,000 for their hogs," he added. "That would be at the very least $3,000,000 in increased household costs."

* * * * * *

Readers of the Mercury who visit the Capital City during annual ex-hibition week and are familiar with the name of redressed lumber that greets the eye in the grounds will be able to visualize what a large part of the trade this looks like at this time. The reason, of course, being that in both north and south sections the bleachers for the Royal Visit are rapidly nearing completion.

* * * * * *

Quiet South Edmonton, along the progress route, is ravaged by the hammering of carpenters and the set-ting up of poster boardings that advertise something or other. And in the evenings, the river valley is filled with a haze of blue smoke from camp fires as citizens give the final touches to their clean up campaign. And as it is typical of Edmonton that the final touches with a drenching rain that every year it does.

* * * * * *

In the Parliament Grounds, carp-enters are likewise busy. At the en-trance to the West Driveway on 8th street a huge Arch of Welcome is being erected as preliminary to the building of the stands and accom-modation for those whose business takes them to the grounds on the day of the visit.

* * * * * *

The illuminated address which the Premier will read to Their Majesties is said to be nearly—or is a beautiful work of craftsmanship which is a fitting memorial to The Royal visit. And the frames for the new oil paint-ings of Their Majesties which will grace the Legislative Chamber have been made in Toronto to specifi-fications supplied by the E. J. Jones art firm in Edmonton. The frames are 10 inches deep and measure eight by five. They are in readiness for the oil paintings in Edmonton could handle them.

ROYAL VISIT

In order to facilitate the matter of school children obtaining reserved seats to witness the Royal Procession on Jasper Avenue, on the Royal Visit Committee, with the co-operation of the Municipal and school officials have decided that the distribu-tion of all schools situated north of and including Bad Boor, a sufficient number of vouchers which, when filled in, and signed by the principal or teacher, will entitle the school to exchange that voucher for a reserved seat ticket. The reserved seat tickets, exchanged for vouchers, will be stamped with the word "school", and the child receiving the voucher may select his or her seat along side that of no parent or guardian, as it may obtain a reserved seat in a group where school children attend in a body.

Free tickets will be issued to every school teacher accompanying groups of children, where the group is in ex-cess of 18 and not in excess of 36, one ticket. Where the group exceeds 36 one extra ticket will be issued. The side and rear entrance tickets for tickets will be closed at all points out-side the City of Edmonton, as mid-night May 20th, 1939. The school and municipal officials are required to make a return o the Royal Visit Committee, 139 MacDonald Hotel, Edmonton, on May 20th, and each re-port shall state the number of tick-ets sold for reserve seats, the num-ber or reserved seat tickets issued in exchanges for vouchers, and a remit-tance of the full amount realized on the sale of tickets.

After May 20th any school child holding a voucher and still desiring to secure a reserved seat may, upon re-turning, receive a reserved seat by surrendering the voucher at Hile's News Stand, Edmonton, provided of course, seats are still available at that time.

Seat tickets have been mailed to supervisors of school divisions and to municipal secretaries throughout the northern part of the Province, and school teachers can furnish informa-tion as to where vouchers may be ex-changed for tickets and where adults may receive tickets upon payment of $1.50

WATER HEMLOCK POISONING IN CATTLE

A number of reports have been received which would indicate that a few cattle are being poisoned by eating Water Hemlock. The warm spring weather has been particularly favourable for the rapid growth of this plant. Water Hemlock is found in local patches throughout Alberta on low, wet, marsh ground. The Sheath of Water Hemlock are the first coloured plants to appear in and around sloughs, and are therefore especially appetizing to cattle which have been over grassed by mildew (rust) and the falcicle removed its head of stock; death takes the crops.

Virgil—38 B.C.

Rust, we believe, has now at last been conquered, but thistles and other weeds after 1,000 years are still roaring their heads and taking the crops.

Dr. Seager Wheeler of Rosthern, Sask., that grand old man of seed growing and agriculture, twenty years ago wrote a fine book entitled "Profitable Grain Growing." In this book Dr. Wheeler recommended the harrowing of growing wheat in order to control such annual weeds as pigweed, wild buckwheat and others.

Dr. Wheeler recommended shrewdly lightly along the rows—not across them—with a light brea harrow on a dry day, just as the wheat seedlings are pouring out of the ground; or if clods are still present in the soil, then to wait until the plant is well established and then use the harrows, or as in the stooling stage, but wheat must not be harrowed when it is 6 inches high, or in the single leaf stage.

If a farmer, therefore, has a very weedy wheat field, he might do worse than to try this plan on a part of it and note its results.

ANGORA WOOL FROM CANADIAN RABBITS

Centred in the village of Aberdeen, Quebec, one of the newest of Canadian industries, the breeding of angora rabbits on a commercial scale, is now entering its third prosperous year. Run by a co-operative unit of several breeders the industry boasts about six hundred angoras, and production about a pound and a half of wool a year. An increasing demand for the silky, long haired wool is making the industry in a growth, says the April issue of the C-I-L Orb in which its co-operative activity is described. Light items as warm as sheep's wool, angora is in demand as a lining for aviation uniform linings, muffs, gloves and scarves, says the article. Hollywood also uses angora to line cold dressing to prevent them from rustling before the microphones. A feature of the Canadian wool is that it does not shed like the imported varieties. The Green Mountain climate and the diet which includes an ample ration of iodized salt are said to be responsible for the superiority of the Canadian wool.

In an hour, unless a small amount only has been consumed, Prothing at the mouth and pronounced drowsiness occur. The animal falls to the ground, violent convulsions take place accompanied by clamping of the jaws and snoking of teeth, breathing is hurried and irregular and the pupil of the eye is dilated. The large amount of poison in the plant makes it almost impossible to use medicinal remedies with beneficial results. Prevention is the best safeguard.

Until there is good grass in your pastures, it is well to keep cattle away from sloughs and low places.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By H. G. L. Strange, Director "The Crop Testing Plan."

"Soon corn (wheat) received its special plagues; the stalks were grassed by mildew (rust) and the falcicle removed its head of stock; death takes the crops ..."

Virgil—38 B.C.

Rust, we believe, has now at last been conquered, but thistles and other weeds after 1,000 years are still roaring their heads and taking the crops.

SOWING GRASSES AND LEGUME MIXTURES FOR HAY

Farmers who intend to sow grasses or legumes for hay ought to give serious consideration to sowing a mixture. There are a number of reasons why mixtures are superior to either crop grown alone for hay purposes. The yield of alfalfa hay has been found to be increased slightly by the addition of a small amount of grass seed. Too large a percentage of grass however, decreases the yield as pointed to strength alfalfa.

Very often a bog, crop is sown on land which has turned to blow. In such cases grass provides more fibre for the soil when it is re-broken, and the legume builds up the nitrogen content. In this way, both the soil fertility and the fibre in the soil are increased. A mixture of grass and alfalfa is more effective than alfalfa alone for controlling weeds. The grass seems to add a smothering effect which materially to control long noxious weeds.

It is a common mistake in this province to cut grass hay too late to secure the greatest feed value from it. With a mixture of alfalfa and a grass, the tendency will be to cut the alfalfa at the proper stage of growth. By cutting at this time, a higher feed value will be obtained from the grass than would have been secured had it been left until later in the season.

In the park belt of the province and in the grey wooded soils, a mixture consisting of alfalfa and timothy has been found satisfactory. Timothy requires considerable moisture and its use is therefore limited to those areas where rainfall is adequate. On the open prairie and in areas where rainfall is limited, alfalfa with Crested Wheat Grass is recommended. Alfalfa with Brome may be grown successfully in the park belt or in areas of the open prairie where moisture is not a limiting factor.

The following rates per acre are suggested:

Alfalfa 8 pounds—Timothy 2 pounds
Alfalfa 8 pounds — Brome 6 pounds
Alfalfa 8 pounds — Crested Wheat Grass 6 pounds

Nurse crops are not recommended for alfalfa, either brome grass or timothy is a mixture. In all cases the seed should be sown in a well prepared seed bed and under suitable moisture conditions.

The fellow who lost a raincoat near the C.N.R. station at Tofield, may, thanks to Mr. Jacobs, have same by calling at the Mercury Office. It is likely to rain anytime, you know.

SPRING IS IN THE AIR

The forces of winter are slowly relaxing their grip on the Northern Hemisphere. Vegetation that has laid dormant over the winter months is coming to life once again. The farmer is casting an appraising eye over his equipment, the housewife is making plans for the annual spring cleaning.

There will be changes in farm equipment and changes in household furniture arrangement of course. Replacements and disposals. Some people will have good used articles to sell, others will be on the look-out to purchase good used articles—some people will do both.

A classified advertisement is one of the best methods of letting other people know if you have anything to sell or to locate the person who has just the thing you are looking for. They are efficient inexpensive publicity mediums, great little business producers. The rates are low—

Cornhill Council Deal With Many Problems

A regular meeting of Rural Municipal District of Cornhill Council was held on Friday, May 12th. There were present, Reeve Walker in the chair, Councillors, Anderson, Coombes, Holmberg, Kortaman and Rowley.

The minutes of the previous meeting and special meeting were read together with the list of accounts passed for payment at last meeting. They were, on motion, adopted.

Councillor Holmberg and Councillor Anderson and himself had at the last meeting been appointed a committee to engage a operator for the elevator grader. They had gone into the matter very thoroughly and had engaged Mr. Peter Ungstad who had already commenced his duties. Mr. Ungstad had had eleven years experience and was well recommended, and the committee hoped he would prove satisfactory.

Councillor Holmberg also brought to the attention of the council the advisability of purchasing two or three stems, or as in the stooling stage, but wheat must not be harrowed when it is 6 inches high, or in the single leaf stage.

If a farmer, therefore, has a very weedy wheat field, he might do worse than to try this plan on a part of it and note its results.

ANGORA WOOL FROM CANADIAN RABBITS

Centred in the village of Aberdeen, Quebec, one of the newest of Canadian industries, the breeding of angora rabbits on a commercial scale, is now entering its third prosperous year. Run by a co-operative unit of several breeders the industry boasts about six hundred angoras, and production about a pound and a half of wool a year. An increasing demand for the silky, long haired wool is making the industry in a growth, says the April issue of the C-I-L Orb in which its co-operative activity is described. Light items as warm as sheep's wool, angora is in demand as a lining for aviation uniform linings, muffs, gloves and scarves, says the article. Hollywood also uses angora to line cold dressing to prevent them from rustling before the microphones. A feature of the Canadian wool is that it does not shed like the imported varieties. The Green Mountain climate and the diet which includes an ample ration of iodized salt are said to be responsible for the superiority of the Canadian wool.

In an hour, unless a small amount only has been consumed, Prothing at the mouth and pronounced drowsiness occur. The animal falls to the ground, violent convulsions take place accompanied by clamping of the jaws and snoking of teeth, breathing is hurried and irregular and the pupil of the eye is dilated. The large amount of poison in the plant makes it almost impossible to use medicinal remedies with beneficial results. Prevention is the best safeguard.

Until there is good grass in your pastures, it is well to keep cattle away from sloughs and low places.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By H. G. L. Strange, Director "The Crop Testing Plan."

"Soon corn (wheat) received its special plagues; the stalks were grassed by mildew (rust) and the falcicle removed its head of stock; death takes the crops ..."

Virgil—38 B.C.

Rust, we believe, has now at last been conquered, but thistles and other weeds after 1,000 years are still roaring their heads and taking the crops.

Dr. Seager Wheeler of Rosthern, Sask., that grand old man of seed growing and agriculture, twenty years ago wrote a fine book entitled "Profitable Grain Growing." In this book Dr. Wheeler recommended the harrowing of growing wheat in order to control such annual weeds as pigweed, wild buckwheat and others.

Dr. Wheeler recommended shrewdly lightly along the rows—not across them—with a light brea harrow on a dry day, just as the wheat seedlings are pouring out of the ground; or if clods are still present in the soil, then to wait until the plant is well established and then use the harrows, or as in the stooling stage, but wheat must not be harrowed when it is 6 inches high, or in the single leaf stage.

If a farmer, therefore, has a very weedy wheat field, he might do worse than to try this plan on a part of it and note its results.

SOWING GRASSES AND LEGUME MIXTURES FOR HAY

Farmers who intend to sow grasses or legumes for hay ought to give serious consideration to sowing a mixture. There are a number of reasons why mixtures are superior to either crop grown alone for hay purposes. The yield of alfalfa hay has been found to be increased slightly by the addition of a small amount of grass seed. Too large a percentage of grass however, decreases the yield as pointed to strength alfalfa.

Very often a bog, crop is sown on land which has turned to blow. In such cases grass provides more fibre for the soil when it is re-broken, and the legume builds up the nitrogen content. In this way, both the soil fertility and the fibre in the soil are increased. A mixture of grass and alfalfa is more effective than alfalfa alone for controlling weeds. The grass seems to add a smothering effect which materially to control long noxious weeds.

It is a common mistake in this province to cut grass hay too late to secure the greatest feed value from it. With a mixture of alfalfa and a grass, the tendency will be to cut the alfalfa at the proper stage of growth. By cutting at this time, a higher feed value will be obtained from the grass than would have been secured had it been left until later in the season.

In the park belt of the province and in the grey wooded soils, a mixture consisting of alfalfa and timothy has been found satisfactory. Timothy requires considerable moisture and its use is therefore limited to those areas where rainfall is adequate. On the open prairie and in areas where rainfall is limited, alfalfa with Crested Wheat Grass is recommended. Alfalfa with Brome may be grown successfully in the park belt or in areas of the open prairie where moisture is not a limiting factor.

The following rates per acre are suggested:

Alfalfa 8 pounds—Timothy 2 pounds
Alfalfa 8 pounds — Brome 6 pounds
Alfalfa 8 pounds — Crested Wheat Grass 6 pounds

Nurse crops are not recommended for alfalfa, either brome grass or timothy is a mixture. In all cases the seed should be sown in a well prepared seed bed and under suitable moisture conditions.

The fellow who lost a raincoat near the C.N.R. station at Tofield, may, thanks to Mr. Jacobs, have same by calling at the Mercury Office. It is likely to rain anytime, you know.

SYNOPSIS

When the wealthy foster parents of Marjorie Wetherill, both die she finds a letter stating that she has a twin sister, that she was adopted when her own parents didn't afford the support both of them, and that her real name is Di Gay. Alone in the world but with a fortune of her own, she starts looking up her own family whom she has never seen. A neighbor, Evan Bower, tries to arrange her out of it and tells her he loves her and asks her to marry him. She promises to think it over but decides first to see her family. She finds that Brentwood is a small town, she is related and gradually personality clashes with things. Her aunt thinks she is odd to see her self-made servants and her self-centered cousin Phil is cold to her. Marjorie gets in touch with Brentwood, where she has a job, and becomes very much interested in the young minister there with whom she later has lunch occasionally. While at home her self-centered cousin buys a book of poetry and gives the deed to it. Marjorie finds it the morning. The whole farce is very perfect. Marjorie's efforts to help Mary Martin obtain a position at Chicago and Gideon Bruce, the young minister, that is a part way on the train with Mary.

By the next day was a half hour, and sped away so fast they were aghast. Marjorie was here and there and everywhere, with her arms around the children, and every body rejoicing because the time was going so fast and shorter. Here they were at Brentwood soon here, the train was half only known them a few brief days!

Mary Marjorie and Gideon were a while in the train as it moved off, waving at the father and Ted. Then the train swept out of the station and they were alone.

The minister got out his pocket book and began to count the many bonds were sent over the text. Marjorie took out her pencil and notebook and kept a great many references for her help when she got back to Chicago alone. In the time flew fast. It seemed only a brief space before they had to put on his overcoat, say to his hat and mittens, grasp her hand for a quick instant, and hurry to get off at Hazlehurst.

He waved to her from the platform as he started, and the train moved on and she was alone. A great desolation came over her. Would she ever see him again?

It was strange the next morning to awaken and find herself almost back in Chicago, to dress hurriedly, eat in time to get out and to find the chauffeur waiting at the station with the car according to orders.

The office was some state, the secretary there in their places, the manager by her desk looking busy, but apparently ready to get on with life as usual. She had left.

After breakfast she went from the far west, to home was looked and to the office. Life for the new was the same tried to do nothing before about leaving but it did not include Evan Bower. In the afternoon she wrote a note to him.

"Dear Evan:

"I suppose I ought to tell you, but I got home safely and shall be glad to see you when you feel like calling.

Sincerely,
Marjorie"

The time passed very quickly, and in the afternoon she went to see her lawyer and check up on some matters. Then just after dinner Evan came.

Evan told her of the news, some he had gone, and at last he got to the little velvet box again.

"Marjorie," he said in a calm voice, "I want you to put my ring on now and wear it."

Then Marjorie looked calmly at was at home! To watch the lovely Evan Bower and answered in a clear light on her father's face as he said: bright:

"Evan, I do appreciate your kindness and your thought for me, and I feel very that I had to be so reserved in the past when you talked welcome! Ah! That was better than to me about these things. But now all the other world had to offer her. that I am home again I have thought And then to drive hastily over to all over and made my decision. Brentwood and meet the trucks which Evan, I am not going to marry you, recently saw a woman carry eighteen after such or at any other time. I live chickens in a basket on her head. am quite sure that I do not love There was Betty on the parlor with you as a woman ought to love a Keith Sheridan to help, taking off man she marries."

Evan Bower looked at her steadily for a while, and slowly put the ring back in its box and the box away in his pocket.

"Very well," he said quietly, determinedly, "if you haven't come to stay and love me, you can tell me so."

He presently he took his leave.

Finally there came a letter from Gideon and her heart leaped up to duck, those two came hastily upon welcome it evening a little over ever each other, Marjorie from the way before she opened it. It wasn't a of the kitchen, and Gideon from the long letter. It was mostly about his work and the questions she had just deposited a scuttle of books that had been misplaced by the new department servers, and then was right to rest other. Gideon put out his arms and enfolded her, perhaps to save her from falling, but it became more than that of needed support, and they were close to one another, and Gideon stooped and pierced a tender kiss on her lips.

Then, just as suddenly, while they were still under the spell of the touch of each other's lips, and did not know anyone else was in the world for the moment, there stood Betty and Keith hand in hand.

"Might a mere brother-in-law offer congratulations?" saluted Keith pleasantly, "because we're in a position to understand."

He grinned and bowed low with his hand over his heart. That is one hand he had other Betty had.

Then he looked up at the embarrassed pair, and his face became serious and grinned.

"It's a little soon, I suppose, in spring all this on the moonlighting multitudes" he offered.

Marjorie with glowing cheeks and dancing eyes was laughing now.

"We don't know anything about this outside-of-all a minute ago!" she announced shyly.

"Then you're" said Betty solemnly. "That's the way it seems to us, all suddenly."

"Well, I'm not ashamed of it, though I didn't think I dared announce my engagement so soon. But I'm glad!" said Gideon solemnly.

"Engagement!" echoed Marjorie blankly.

But the rest were scurrying to the front door to welcome the family.

The motor car" said Betty solemnly. "That's the way it seems to us, all suddenly."

"Oh, it's too good to have all these things at once!" she said. "My girl coming home to Brentwood and all my children here!"

"Yes, Mother, dear," chirped Betty from the doorway, her hand again in Keith's while whirled across at Marjorie and Gideon, "even more children than you bargained for!"

FREE BUTTER DISTRIBUTION

The Hon. J. G. Gardiner, Dominion Minister of Agriculture, announced in the Commons, on April 24th, that the plan for the proposed free distribution of butter to persons on relief, or otherwise charity, is now about completed.

It will be remembered that a proposal scheme is being tried out in the United States of making a distribution of an especially cheap grade, and in some cases of a free distribution, of butter. Canada has been found to be held in surplus quantities, such as wheat, flour, butter and so forth

Butter can only go bad in Canada and the United States schemes are confined to areas in countries where seems to be no reason why human beings should suffer from the lack of nourishment. It is held in storage in any particular food is held in abundant and apparently unwanted surplus in their own country.

Some day, we venture to suggest, the world equally well will realize that it is just as wrong for the people in any country to lack essential foodstuffs and raw materials for clothing and shelter, when those foodstuffs and materials are held in surplus quantities even in foreign countries. Certainly those countries which are needing the surplus products are ever willing to pay for them with the products of their own soil, i.e. with the goods they manufacture.

HOW TO ACQUIRE STATELY CARRIAGE

The grasshopper forecast for Alberta this year is for an outbreak covering a larger area than in 1938, with an extension of the infested area westward and eastward, and a light and patchy area recorded for the first time in the Peace River district.

The range of severity of infestation over the Province is termed "light" to "very severe" depending on a great extent upon the growth and climatic conditions last fall and this spring and early summer. Where the forecast is termed "severe" there is a threat of wide spread damage of great intensity, which necessitates control measures on the part of farmers in those areas. Even in the light infested areas farmers may be expected to be present in sufficient numbers to require definite areas in individual fields. Therefore, the hopper committee thinks it necessary to be extremely serious, and will require that the Province continue its present vigorous and well organized control campaign to avoid serious losses of crops in many large districts.

The Provincial Government is placing control machinery at present at the disposal of Municipalities and Improvement Districts in order to combat the expected outbreak. Farmers within the grasshopper infested areas are required to comply with the provisions of the "Provincial Agricultural Pests Act" in control of grasshoppers.

Communities and Municipalities wishing to hold public meetings, or requiring information, should communicate with the Field Crops Branch of the Provincial Department of Agriculture, Edmonton.

VACCINATION FOR EQUINE ENCEPHALOMYELITIS

The Department of Agriculture has received reports which would indicate that in some municipalities almost all of the horses have been vaccinated against this disease. In some districts rural re-actions have delayed taking preventive measures, but it is expected that in these areas vaccination will be done as soon as possible. Supplies are being distributed to meet all requirements. Up to May 2nd, 204,111 treatments had been made. Horses which have not been vaccinated should be treated immediately to ensure immunity.

Dafoe has returned from Toronto with a motor car purchased from the profits of the last word in comfort and safety in this rough Northern country.

Always a keen motorist, Dafoe rented little "Country Doctor" included a motor car among his equipment and "extras" which he stipulated for his 1939 model. Now he has found that he is a hunter to keep the chill out of the air in all but the mid-summer months and apparently unwanted surpluses in their own country.

Some day, we venture to suggest, the world equally well will realize that it is just as wrong for the people in any country to lack essential foodstuffs and raw materials for clothing and shelter, when those foodstuffs and materials are held in surplus quantities even in foreign countries. Certainly those countries which are needing the surplus products are ever willing to pay for them with the products of their own soil, i.e. with the goods they manufacture.

By E. C. L. Strange, Director "The Crop Testing Plan."

It was recently suggested at Ottawa that the payment of this bonus by the West could hardly be used as an argument for asking the Dominion to give special assistance to the Western wheat industry, for the reason that Eastern Canadian farmers also pay a large bonus for Canadian manufacturing industries. I cautiously suggest, however, that there is an important difference here.

The tariff burden, it is true, imposes on the Eastern, as well as on Western, farmers a higher cost for all the things they buy for living and production; but the tariff imposes an additional heavy burden on the Western wheat industry, which is that it has definitely curtailed the exportation of much Western wheat, and of Western wheat in the largest single agricultural or other export industry of Canada, and so I suggest merits special consideration.

But the real remedy for these tariff burdens is not to be looked for on all of us, and particularly on Western farmers, is to lower tariffs—so that the wheat, and all other Canadian primary products, may readily be sold abroad.

JELLYFISH BEAT THE WEATHERMAN

When it comes to prognosticating barometer and storms, the jellyfish is in a class by itself. Last fall, Hallam Harvey, Nova Scotia, experimented with jellyfish, a shoreward movement of which usually happens following the formation and subsequent movement of North Atlantic tropical cyclones. The movement was timed by means of them in chill nets, according to the Natural Resources Department of the Canadian National Railways. The theory part of it was that the official weather forecaster passed it up as it was just one of the storms that did not happen to travel across the usual shipping routes and have was not reported. The jellyfish put in their appearance in Halifax on September 19th and the storm broke loose on the New England coast on September 21st causing tremendous damage.

VACCINATION FOR EQUINE ENCEPHALOMYELITIS

In some districts rural re-actions have delayed taking preventive measures, but it is expected that in these areas vaccination will be done as soon as possible. THE WEEK IN EDMONTON

The Royal Visit produces greater activity as the days go by. Plans for the thousand are being displayed in Edmonton, and in all streets city companies are hitching teams, carting away rubbish and building stands. On account here others are planting shrubs and doing beautifying that may replacing trees that have died in the course of the years.

******

Around the Legislature Building carpenters are completing two arches—one of welcome and one of departure, through which the Royal Procession will proceed on the occasion of the formal visit to the seat of government. Public works all agencies and road rollers have also been over the travelled portions of the drives and removed all dust and other hazards.

******

In the Building, the work of decoration and renovation is drawing to a climax, and the Chambers will be in fine shape and fresh appearance when the week is completed. In the main rotunda, immediately opposite the show case of Alberta Championship grains which has drawn visitors by the thousands, a platform has been added until the next meeting.

The Andrew Kosach and Mah Kim problem came up again. It will be remembered Mah Kim gave Mr. Kosach his much credit due to a misunderstanding. An amount involved is $21.00. Council felt that they were not responsible.

Councillor Forsbey moved that the resolution issuing Mrs. McLeod a quarter section for hay purposes passed at a previous meeting be rescinded. Vote was on error as to the particular quarters. The motion carried.

Legal Consolidation to be Cancelled

A list of consolidations coming due in 1939 and still remaining unpaid had been prepared. The secretary was instructed to write to the interested parties asking them to make some arrangements as soon as possible. It was moved by Councillor Anderson, that consolidation agreements dated June 1st, 2nd and 3rd, 1939, inclusive be cancelled. Carried.

The electric fixtures installed in the Municipal building by J. O. A. Letourneau were purchased by the Council for $60.00.

The relief recipient list was revised some being cut off others left on according to the Council's understanding of their needs. Status.

It was decided to charge $5.00 per day to the division in which the elevator grader is working. The amount to take care of repairs and incidental expenses. This charge is a separate item to general running expenses.

The British American Oil Co. declared a 90 day option on some Kingman lots, the sale price being $50.00 for 6 lots. On the motion of Councillor Anderson Council accepted $4.50 for a 90-day option taken by the British American Oil Co. on six Kingman lots.

Mr. Gladys interviewed Council re purchase of lots of S. E. S-41-38. On motion of Councillor Sunday 12th quarter was loaned to Mr. Gladys.

Application of Mr. Greeve for Demotion-Provincial Municipal loan then came up for consideration. Mr. Greeve had returned to the meeting and urged that his request for recommendation be granted. He is a married man, with family, has the reputation of being a good worker and is located on a C.P.R. quarter. It was moved by Councillor Forsbey that Mr. Greeve be recommended to the Agricultural Department for the $600.00 Farm loan scheme. Carried.

During consideration of the above Mr. Olaf Olson burst upon Council bringing in Mr. Hay to prove his contentions that Mr. Hay had told him that Council had leased Mr. Hay land that day. With about five fellows talking at once and Ole a jump ahead of the rest, the matter was finally straightened out to everyone's satisfaction. Mr. Hay had not been leased land that day. The Council had been authorized to act according to his judgement in the matter.

Moved by Councillor Coombes that secretary write a letter of condolence to the Abernathy family expressing the sympathy of the Council in their recent and bereavement.—Carried.

Councillor Anderson reported re poundering a nuisance ground with Kingman. He stated Mr. Butterfield of the Department of Health had interviewed him at Kingman, and they had gone into the matter quite thoroughly. They had picked two suitable sites but when approached the owners were unwilling to sell land for this purpose. There the matter now stands. The secretary was instructed to write and inform the department of the situation.

A number of accounts were presented and passed for payment.

Meeting adjourned.

A. T. A. HOLD SPECIAL MEETING AT HOLDEN

On Saturday, May 13, seventy-five teachers of the Holden A.T.A. met at Holden for the Spring meeting. The reports of the various committees showed the local to be active and progressive. The treasurer, Mr. J. E. Hemphill of Bruce reported a cash balance of $97.26. The Library Committee reported that they used funds received from school board and enthusiasts to set up a Teacher's Reference Library consisting of forty books. The Salary Schedule Committee reported that the current salary cut of 12 per cent would be reduced to 2 per cent.

The Festival Committee was commended upon its management of the Divisional Festival held on May 5. They reported 622 entries from 25 school rooms which had kept 7 adjudicators busy all day. They were especially pleased with the response of the rural schools and had found that in noise and recitations approximately half the awards went to rural schools. They had received $309.55 for the festival and had a balance of $4.85. The retiring committee was asked to draft a program which could be passed on to the next committee.

The meeting passed a resolution requesting that the salary be paid in twelve parts instead of in ten as at present. The Convention Committee was chosen as follows: Miss M. Craig, Viking; Miss Anne Robertson, Bruce; Mr. Chalmers, Holden; Mr. J. D. McDonald, Ryley; Miss Bonert, Tofield with Mr. McLean as an ex-officio member. It was decided to hold the convention in Ryley this fall.

The president, Mr. Chalmers, reminded the teachers about some points of professional conduct and asked those who were intending to resign to play fair with the board and notify them as soon as possible.

The meeting enjoyed an address from Inspector McLean, in which he stated that under the new system the teachers are regarded as civil servants and that therefore they must make an effort to live up to their vocation. He said that interest in any school room depends upon the teacher who must try to obtain co-operation and a freer relationship between the teacher and the pupils. He commended the home like atmosphere he had found in many rural schools and stated that an attempt was being made to help rural pupils attend high schools by establishing dormitories in the towns. The recent festival, he said, had convinced him that competition was a valuable motivation from school work and gave the children a chance to mix with those from other centres. He did not feel however that the work should be a natural outcome of the school programme instead of superseding it. Mr. Ray Shaul told the meeting some pertinent facts about schooling; that in Saskatchewan last year more money was spent on liquor than on education; that the present minimum wage for teachers placed them on the same salary basis as unskilled labor and would have to be increased to take care of the necessity for extra training. He felt that Provincial and Dominion aid are a necessity.

A delightful banquet was served at 6.30. On behalf of the committees in charge of the festival Mr. McLean presented a gift to Mrs. Seibert in appreciation of her work as secretary of the festival. Mr. Hidris, Principal of Strathcona High School was the guest speaker and was thoroughly enjoyable as he mixed a few pertinencies and a little good advice with much humour.

GOLD PERCH

The New York Times — Last summer, when wheat hit 50½ cents a bushel, it was at the lowest level in the country's history, on a gold price basis. That price was equivalent to 29.14 cents in the old dollar. Even the present price of about 72 cents translates into 42.35, lower than this country's all-time "low" of 44½, established in 1932.

Advices from Edmonton are to the effect that there is a constant demand for rooms and you are urged to obtain your seats as early as possible, to avoid disappointment. FAKERS FATTEN ON DISEASE IN HORSES

Fake remedy merchants have made a profit out of the distress of farmers faced with widespread disease among their horses. Dr. Steele, veterinarian of the provincial government, issued a further warning to farmers this week, pointing out that Chick Vaccine produced the only effective results. Useless concoctions of oil blends had been sold by men travelling around the country, charging high prices. In one case a visitor cut off the ears of 200 animals at $5 per head, Dr. Steele said.

Consistently wrong means all exhibit events at home, he is consumed with a desire to go to Oxford, England. While there, he becomes his winning ways, but not without set backs arising from things other than athletic. There is plenty of humour in the picture, both American and English. There is a splendid love story, combined with thrills born of athletic endeavor. The photography is excellent, and you hear a representative of the actual Oxford Mile, recorded specially for this picture. A Tank at Oxford is really first class entertainment for the whole family. Re: AGRICULTURAL PESTS ACT OFFICIAL NOTICE RE DESTRUCTION OF GRASSHOPPERS

To: All Owners and Occupants of Land

Your attention is directed to the provisions of The Agricultural Pests Act, which requires every owner and occupant of land to destroy all pests specified within the aforementioned Act.

The Municipal District is required to direct and see that every owner and occupant of land takes the necessary precautions and conducts an active and agressive control program with respect to grasshoppers present on lands under its control.

Your attention is drawn to the following Sections of The Agricultural Pests Act:

8 Every person shall take active control measures with a view to destroying all pests upon lands owned or occupied or controlled by him, when given specific directions with regard to such destruction by an officer by shall obey such directions.

6 A notice may be served upon him requiring him to perform tasks any actions.

7 In the event of any person failing within 5 (three) days after such notice has been served upon him to obey such directions, any officer may secure the proper material and take the necessary action and recover such costs—and the amount of such account shall be recorded against the land concerned in the manner as is enforced in to some manner as that of the taxes against the land.

7. Any person failing to comply with the provisions of this Act, or any order or regulation hereunder provided, shall be liable to a penalty not more than one hundred dollars ($100.00) and costs.

You are hereby notified pursuant to be provisions of the Agricultural Pests Act, that you are required forthwith in accordance with methods outlined in Government posters or instructions issued by an officer charged with the enforcement of the Act, to take active measures to poison and destroy all grasshoppers on all lands, with road allowances adjacent thereto, owned, occupied or controlled by you, and that upon failure so to do you will be liable to a penalty not more than one hundred dollars ($100.00) and costs.

Your attention is directed to Government posters and other literature outlining methods of control which are displayed in Post Offices, Grain Elevators, Mining Stations and other public places. I would make the following suggestions and recommendations with respect to control of grasshoppers:

1. Every few days, after May 15, examine carefully all roadside headlands, and weedy or abandoned fields. Report the discovery of hoppers immediately to the Municipal Secretary.

2. Do not sow stubble fields after abandonment or summer-fallowed in 1936 should be cultivated shallowly early in the Spring to bring egg pods to the surface where wind and sun may destroy them.

3. Plough four rod guard strips around all stable fields. Cultivate such fields from the outside towards the centre, and poison the hoppers on the centre strip.

4. Spread poisoned bait while the sun shines. Hoppers feed only while temperature is between 65 and 90 degrees F. in the shade.

LIKE ELEVATORS SEEK RE-PANDED USES FOR WHEAT

WINNIPEG, May 16.—Carrying on their work in seeking expansion of markets for Canadian wheat, Line Elevator Companies have appointed Coll Lamont as their representative to attend the American conference of representatives of agriculture, industry and science which is being held at Columbus, Ohio, this week under the auspices of the National Farm Chemurgic Council of the United States.

"While the Columbus Conference is to deal chiefly with progress in the finding of new industrial uses for soya beans and corn, its deliberations will have a direct bearing on markets for wheat," said Charles E. Hayes, President of the North-West Grain Dealers' Association. As an example of the manner in which wheat substitutes are being met, Mr. Hayes cited the report of the Canadian Trade Commissioner to Japan in the current issue of the Commercial Intelligence Journal issued by the Department of Trade & Commerce. The Trade Commissioner states: "During the past month several years Canada's shipments of wheat flour to Japan have been practically confined to one large firm which manufactures a cementing cement (flour sauce and substitute) from the gluten obtained from the flour. Since it is no longer able to obtain the type of flour required for that purpose (due to exchange regulations) it is using the soya bean as a substitute. This business used to mean nearly 1,000,000 bags of flour for Canada annually."

"In this one instance soya bean research meant the loss of markets for 2,250,000 bushels of Canadian wheat", said the director of the Board. Canada exported so much as 45,000,000 bushels of wheat and wheat flour in one year to Japan and China but exports to those Oriental markets are now virtually nil.

"Great developments have taken place in research into new uses for corn and soya beans. Research has found new industrial uses for more than 80,000,000 bushels of corn annually, and new uses are constantly being found for soya beans. Research must be directed to new uses for wheat in order to protect this cereal from inroads being made in the development of substitutes for wheat and resultant loss of wheat markets."

"The Line Elevator Companies through their organization — the North-West Grain Dealers' Association — brought forth the plan for the establishment of a division of the National Research Council in Western Canada whose principal duty would be research into industrial utilization of wheat as well as finding new outlets for this cereal. The proposal has already found support on the floor of the Dominion Parliament and early development of the proposal is hoped for. The Line Elevator Companies have also planned before the International Wheat Advisory Committee, now meeting in London, England, a proposal for the establishment of an International Laboratory in London. This laboratory would be staffed with leading scientists drafted from various countries, whose duty it would be to conduct research into expanding uses for wheat throughout the world. Communications received from Andrew Cairns, Secretary of the Wheat Advisory Committee, indicate that the special report made by Mr. Lamont after a visit to the leading research laboratories of the United States was particularly interested in the report. The Committee is continuing its deliberations in London at the present time and is to be hoped that early action will be taken in dealing with this phase of seeking a solution for the excess wheat problem. Expansion of markets for wheat and the placing of the surplus production in consumptive channels will have a direct bearing on improvement of the price structure," he said.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By E. L. L. Grange, Director "Do Crop Testing Plan."

The United States Department of Agriculture celebrates that organized poisoning campaign for grasshopper control from the Rocky Mts. to the Pacific Coast last year saved farmers' crops worth $176,000,000. More than 40,000 farmers used approximately 150,000 tons of poisoned bait to control 30,000,000 acres & this furnished protection for more than 50,000,000 acres of crops. The Kansas City Times estimates that in the State of Kansas alone grasshoppers caused about $7,000,000 worth of loss to crops in 1938 but that the poisoning campaign saved $20,000,000 worth of crops. "Farmers in the west," said Kansas City Times, "are now thoroughly convinced of the efficacy of the poisoning campaign and the work will go on this year on an even larger scale.

No doubt the same proportionate saving by poisoning was last year made with the crops in Alberta. Decade, although severe losses were experienced in Southern Saskatchewan, Every farmer, however, was organized in grasshopper areas of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and saved himself and his neighbors from severe losses of crops and money if he will put forth the same effort again this spring and summer to work with the provincial and Dominion Government officials, who in turn are operating jointly with those in charge of the grasshopper campaign in the United States.

THE WEEK IN EDMONTON

EDMONTON, May 22:— Announcement by Logan highway, construction of which is a vital factor in the building up of a transport system for Alberta, is to receive benefit of an additional $100,000 appropriation this season, it was announced by Hon. W. A. Fallow Wednesday last.

The highway, which is already receiving $100,000 for construction this year under the joint agreement between federal and provincial governments, is the last link in the famed circle tour which is expected to attract a great number of tourists to Canada to visit the province.

The province proposed another joint agreement whereby the expenditure of $200,000 there, was announced Wednesday, Ottawa refused grant for the time being. As stated however, the provincial contribution will be added to the first appropriation.

Canada's tourist trade is worth more than $200,000,000 annually, and of this, Alberta gets more than one per cent at the present time.

Some work will also be done on the Mackenzie highway, the public works minister stated. As only 15 to 20 miles of this project is in Alberta territory, the main part of the construction will be done on the B.C. side of the boundary, but a number of volunteer roadbuilders in that section has attracted wide attention.

Edmonton saw a new record created during the week-end. The University students were graduated on Tuesday at the impressive convocation exercises. Three honorary degrees were conferred, in addition. His Honor Lt. Gov. J. C. Bowen, Chief Justice C. R. Mitchell of the Alberta Supreme Court and L. W. Brockington, K. C., chairman of the C.B.C. directory were honored.

In connection with the King's Visit to Edmonton, officials of the Canadian Legion have asked provincial authorities to arrange for the presentation of Joseph Hahn, who celebrates his 104th birthday next March 17, to Their Majesties. Mr. Hahn, who is still hale and hearty, has announced that he will be out with other citizens to see the King and Queen in any case.

Track drivers who wish to carry passengers during the Royal Visit are reminded that a permit for this must be obtained from the Highway Traffic Board. The permits are free. Owing to the great amount of traffic that will cross the roads at that time, truck drivers have been warned that $5 suffice an hour is the speed limit, that parking on main highways is prohibited and that every truck must come to a full stop before crossing any railway track. Traffic officers will patrol the highways to watch for violations of traffic rules.

Department of Agriculture announced during the week that 108 boys have been placed in farming work under the joint youth training scheme. The preliminary methods for farming, market gardening, bee keeping, poultry farming and creamery work. Boys are given board and a small allowance for the first year, then are placed if possible on wage basis. Afterwards they are encouraged to start out on during the week have the opportunity of viewing a display of Alberta products on the first floor. Included in the display are bats, butter, wool, potato flour and starches, honey, beans, sugar beets, lumber, sugar, paints, lumber, shingle stains, cereals, flour, turpaper, chemical fields, paper masks any containers, pottery and earthenware; tinplate products, soaps, cosmetics and toilet soap. Raw materials include native lumber, beans, clay, pottery clay, glassware, tar sands and gypsum.

Belief that Alberta tar sands may be used for roadmixt in the province held by observers at Edmonton as result of the reply made by Hon. W. A. Fallow to a resolution from an Edmonton body which requested the use of this natural product. "I hope that the Provincial Company will go into production this year and extract asphalt from the sands," he said. The large sand content of the native product is said to prohibit transportation on an economical basis at existing freight rates.

One more car has been added to the Canadian Pacific harmony cars intended to complete the Royal Procession. The seventh will carry police officers as guards. Their Majesties will ride in the first my accompanied by an escort.

The problem of accompanying Royal Visit spectators to their along the progress route is engaging the attention of officials in Edmonton. Incidentally, the occasion presents official "Hurrah" is "Hur-ra-h-r", and this will be found quite adapted to the Canadian tongue. Here's for louder and longer "Hurrahs!"

DEEP-SEA "ANGLER" FISH THAT CARRIES OWN FISHING TACKLE ABOUT WITH IT

Introducing the "Angler". He, not the two-legged fellow who catches fish for fun from the river bank or lake. This "Angler" is a fish itself and carries by every fishing tackle that he may catch other fish to fill its tummy.

Clowns wrote of this creature centuries ago and where scientists speak of it in formal phrase they use Lophius Piscatorius and call the fish Lophius piscatorius. In popular speech he is sometimes called the Monk-fish or indeed, by any one of half a dozen other names.

The angler is found on both sides of the North Atlantic, though it is not believed to be found on the west side of the water it has been a staple food fish in different European countries for many years. The flesh is firm and white and is perhaps most suitable for frying.

The fish is one of the most ancient, and in some respects one of the most curious. Many of the ways of procuring in Canadian waters—the water of the Atlantic Ocean—are quite curious, it takes the name of angler from the fact that it carries on top of its head a spiny rod which is very much like a fishing rod complete with bait. This ray gives the fish the appearance of being equipped with fishing tackle of its own and, as a matter of fact, it may even serve, in a sense, as fishing gear. A bait-like appendage to the ray glows with radiance in the deep waters and apparently lures many a fish curio about in the search of food. That's food then all right, but the would-be diners become the dinner. In a like, they find the angler's wide mouth gaping for food and a moment later they have been nabbed up, or perhaps its down. The angler is a voracious creature and many specimens which have been examined contain the remains of other fish as large as the devourers themselves. Nor does the angler stop at eating fish; sometimes it is called the Goose-fish, taking the name from the fact, recorded in a bulletin written by a Canadian scientist but dealing with the general history of the fish and its habits, that in some cases it is said that "it is known to have swallowed geese which were floating on the surface of the water. Seven wild ducks are said to have been found in the stomach of one angler and six coots in another.

The Newsy Contest Winner

In appearances the angler is no beauty. Its wide, flat head makes up half of the tapering conical body. Lengthened supports of the pectoral fins, says the Canadian scientist who studied the fish for federal fisheries work, look somewhat like a pair of arms and the whole appearance is that of a monster. The head, by the way, would be a good thing for a nervous person to meet near a graveyard on a dark night if fish travelled roads. Its big eyes and fearsome mouth, its projection, spiky, with enormous mouth, large jaw projecting, each jaw bearing four rows of teeth, large and prominent upon the outside edge of the head.

In coloring, the angler is usually a mottled chocolate on the upper portion of the body and white below. The average size of fish examined and captured during the Canadian investigation was about three feet, but the fish have been a contributing factor.

NEXT MEETING will be held on Saturday, June 10, 1939 commencing at the hour of 10 o'clock in the forenoon.

THE ROYAL VISIT—

THEIR MAJESTIES King George VI. and Queen Elizabeth are already well advanced along their Canadian tour, to-day (Wednesday) delighting and thrilling Winnipeg with their presence. At each place the Royal pair stop they are greeted by tumultuous throngs eager to show their appreciation of the visit of the King and Queen to Canada. There is no doubt that in common with the millions of their subjects scattered across Canada, King George and Queen Elizabeth are obtaining genuine pleasure from the tour. Yet it is equally obvious that a tour of this nature is exacting and imposes considerable strain upon the Royal Visitors. It is the manner in which this service is being given that has endeared the Royal Couple to the millions of Canadians who have seen them. As one American newspaperman humorously remarked to the King "You are in there punching, and can take it." With about a quarter of the tour completed, Their Majesties have the good wishes of Canadians that the rest of the tour will be equally pleasing to the subjects who serve them and whom they serve.

RAIN IN JUNE—

THE COPIOUS rains of the past few days will hearten many a farmer whose fields were becoming unduly dry. It was a "million dollar" rain even though there is no guarantee that the farmers will get the million dollars. Abundant moisture is of course always associated with a good crop, but it is becoming more and more obvious that as far as the West is concerned, to get the maximum results the rain should fall within definite time limits. The year 1915 is Canada's great grain crop year, all three provinces in that year exceeding their average yield. Official records show that the early spring in 1915 was very dry, very little precipitation falling during April and May. June, however, was very wet, falling rain being the rule rather than the exception. Intermittent showers fell throughout July and harvest time there was a bumper crop. So it would seem that the old time "rainy season" coming in June, even though it brought along with it myriads of mosquitoes and the more or less unuseful cooking of the frogs, is what Western Canada needs to produce a bountiful crop.

A SUPER-STATESMAN?—

"Oh, there is so little butter and so little margarine, one really does not know what to put on the bread. The little bit of fat there is one needs for preparing lunch and dinner—such and similar complaints are frequently voiced by unthinking housewives. "German News Agency introducing an appeal to housewives to use suet for cooking.

The above paragraph which we believe to be quite authentic, is a sad commentary on the condition of world trade to-day. It is far from our intention to place blame on anyone. The condition above described may be the result of blunders on the part of German statesmen, it may be the result of the mistakes of statesmen of other nations, or it may be pure incapacity or inability of the statesmen of a countries to perform the tasks they are confronted with, to the mutual well being of all peoples.

But is does seem strange that in an era when international credit and finance bobs around like a cork on a bucket of water; and when several other countries are complaining about butter surpluses, it should be necessary for German housewives to have to be cajoled into using suet for cooking instead of butter, margarine or lard. Not that there is so much wrong with using a limited amount of suet. In the hands of the right cook it will make a wholesome pudding, but at best it is a poor second for butter or lard.

We have heard the phrase "guns instead of butter," which we consider very poor reasoning, for the philosophy of an empty stomach rarely adds to the solidarity of any nation. We have heard of tariffs and embargoes, which we consider are brakes on commerce as a whole and not motive power. We have heard of falling international trade combined with surpluses destroyed by fire and water. And we wonder, in the light of modern transportation facilities, why?

Perhaps the world is needing a super-statesman. A man, he must almost be a miracle man, who can so co-ordinate the scarcities and surpluses of different nations so that there may be sufficient for all. Then perhaps the agriculturist and the worker may come into their own. For there are millions hungry for the fruits of the farmers' toil and there are farmers hungry for the result of the workers' skill.

THE FARMER SHALL NOT BE SACRIFICED

You can use your imagination any way you like, you can look back at all the good old days when expanding markets took care of an expanding agriculture, but in the end you come right back up against the stubborn fact that the American farmer has to adjust his farm plant to the actual situation which he faces today." This statement was made by E. M. Evans, Administrator of the United States Adjustment Act, in an address before the Millers' National Federation at Chicago last week.

"The United States wheat farmer in the 1890's has been face to face with conditions he has never known before," he continued. "Farms over which he has little or no control have assailed him from all sides. World political and trade factors have reached into the wheat belt without mercy. They have determined his return for providing a hungry world with four billion bushels of Bermuda on a regular West Indies cruise from Boston and Halifax has been found on the westerly coast of France, according to information received by the U. S. Hydrographic office here. The bottle had drifted about 1,800 miles in the 20 months it was adrift. The Hydrographic office found the bottle useful in its study of ocean currents.

of farming that will not force them to rid the soil of fertility. Purchase of agricultural products means less for farm income and low income forces a ruthless waste of soil fertility.

ONE BOTTLE GOES A LONG WAY

Boston, Mass. May 22:- A bottle which Capt. R. A. Clarke, master of the Canadian National liner "Lady Drake" tossed overboard on Oct. 8, 1936, when the ship was approximately 300 miles south of Bermuda on a regular West Indies cruise from Boston and Halifax has been found on the westerly coast of France, according to information received by the U. S. Hydrographic office here. The bottle had drifted about 1,800 miles in the 20 months it was adrift. The Hydrographic office found the bottle useful in its study of ocean currents.

T. C. A. HAS 20-YEAR OLD PASSENGER

Vancouver, B.C. May 22:- A week ago Trans-Canada Air Lines thought it had brought its oldest traveller, in point of years, from the East to Vancouver in the person of 70-year-old Harry Brandon, Weston, Ont., retired farmer. J. A. O'Malley, Dathay of Capt. Tom T. D. O'Malley, however, was recently a passenger to Vancouver carrying his 98 years lightly by air. He left Toronto at night and spent a day at Winnipeg en route visiting his brother. A hale and hearty octogenarian, Mr O'Malley is a veteran of the historic Red Rebellion and represents a real link with the early history of Western Canada.

PRESERVING POPLAR FENCE POSTS

Poplar posts that have been treated with bluestone at the Dominion Range Experimental Station at Manyberries, after being in the ground ten to twelve years were just as sound as the day they were put in. In the Manyberries area, trench fences built with bluestone poplars in 1903 have over 70 per cent of the original posts still in service in 1938.

Fence posts will be needed for repairing old fences and building new ones. The Department of Agriculture offers the following suggestions for treating poplar posts. Bluestone is necessary and metal equipment must not come in contact with it. A small number of posts may be treated in a wooden barrel. When a number of posts are to be treated, a vat should be built into an excavation in the ground so that the top is at the ground level. A vat, 4 feet 8inches in length, 4 feet in width, 3 feet in depth, with a 6 inch wall, is suitable for ordinary purposes. A vat of his size would hold 100 to 200 posts standing on end.

Peel and sharpen the driving posts and peel the part that will be below the ground and a few inches above. Also peel a strip 2 or 3 inches wide the full length of the post. The posts are set on end in the vat so that the posts will stand in 4¼ to 7 feet of solution. The bluestone can be dissolved by suspending it in a sack from one corner of the vat. It is best to allow about 24 hours for the bluestone to saturate the water when first making the solution, as bluestone is not quickly soluable. Enough bluestone is kept in the sack that a certain amount of solid remains. A saturated solution contains about 3½ to 3 pounds of bluestone per gallon of cold water.

INTO THE SUNSET

BY JACKSON GREGORY

First Instalment

The Haverils, a widely scattered clan across hundreds of cowless western wilderness miles, were reputed a folk it was just as well not to antagonize. There were the Texas Haverils, big men once with blue-black beards and challenging eyes. There were the Pan-handle Haverils still farther west-ward. Then, still farther west were the New Mexico Haverils, the Sun-down Haverils as they came to be known.

Of the Sundown Haverils there was one called Barry who in many ways could have been looked on as the embodiment of the outstanding qualities of the whole family.

His father, Ben Haveril, was still a young man, lusty and ruggedly violent, generous and kindly enough with his small flock at most times, a little short of a devil when in drink. His mother, Lucinda, was one of the Oakwoods of Virginia who still clung tenaciously to their own family traditions and pride.

It was she who had given her youngest his name, which wasn't Barry at all but Baron. She used proudly that there had been a Baron Oakwood long ago in Virginia, something to title Barry himself.

In his later teens Barry left home. He didn't know why he went away. He didn't think about it. It was the forest pulling him.

During the six or eight weeks before he thought of going back homeward he made many long exploratory trips toward both north and west through the mountains. Only twice in that time did he see human beings.

One day, toward sundown, he sat on a rock in front of his cabin looking down into the long common valley below, a sight he seldom tired brooding over. He named it for himself Sun Creek Valley.

He heard rifle shots muffled with distance in an intervening neck of the woods. He had never heard so many shots so close together and wondered how many men there were and what they could be shooting at. He got his answer almost instantly. There were several men shooting at a single rider who had fled on ahead into the lower end of Barry's Sun Creek Valley.

He saw the flash of reddish-yellow fire when the fugitive, fleeing no longer, fired at his pursuers whom Barry could not see.

If it hadn't been so far he would have drawn to go down and find out about things. Also it was swiftly growing dark; it would be a moonless night and whatever was happening down there would be over in a few minutes or would have to await another.

But before sunup he was on his way to investigate. The dawn was brightening and he had travelled half the distance when a voice called to him from a brush patch thicket:

"Drop yore gun! Drop it quick or I'll kill yuh!"

The speaker was not ten steps away. Barry let his rifle slide out of his hands and felt a queer prickling chill along his blood as he jerked his head about to stare. At first he could see nothing but gray buck brush and gray rocks. Then he saw the muzzle of a rifle barrel resting on a flat-topped boulder.

"Step over this way," said the voice "Step, kid, or I'll shoot yuh hell-i"

Barry obeyed.

That was how he first met up with Jessie Conroy. The Conroy, on the day Barry first saw him, was about twenty-three years old and rolled as he was behind the rock, with his bright black eyes glittering and an ugly twist to his white-lipped mouth. he made Barry think of a rattlesnake, he seemed just that full of the menace of sudden death. He was a flinching handsome young devil and sense like his, devilish for an almost girlishly fine-featured face. There was enough light for Barry to make out that he was pretty badly hurt.

Conroy was suspicious of him at first, afraid he might be one of the crowd that had killed his horse under him and shot him down in the night. Once that he learned otherwise his manner changed.

"I'm hurt right bad," he said, but I'll make it pay. Especially if I can have help. Those fellers that rode me down, they'll be outin' back after a while. Then they won't hurry; I knocked over anyhow two as' maybe three, as' I'd of got 'em all if one of their bullets hadn't of glanced off'n a rock an' drilled me."

"Why'd they want to drill you?" asked Barry.

"They're bandits, that's what," said Conroy. "Killers. Here yuh got to help me clean out afore they come smoking back."

"I'll go get me my rifle," said Barry.

"Shore," nodded Conroy. "Then some give me some help. I c'n hardly walk, but if I had both laigs shot off I'd crawl where he had some hoss."

After they had done what they could for Conroy's two wounds, one through his left arm, one through his left shoulder, to crawled into Barry's bunk and lay quiet.

When Conroy got out of bed to move restlessly about, he began asking questions. He wanted to know how it was that Barry lived here all alone, where he had come from—and why.

Why had he come? Well, he didn't rightly know. He just left one place and came another. Conroy watched him narrowly, plainly believing that he was being told a meager part of the truth. Then he asked, still eying Barry with bright suspicion as though watching for sign of another lie, what his name was.

"Barry. No, I'm Barry Haveril." Conroy started laughing.

"Say, that's funny," he said. "I'm a Haveril, too, one of the Texas Haverils; but my name's Jesse Conroy. Ever heard that name, Barry?"

"No," said Barry, "I never. But you've a brother named Haveril, Conroy?"

"Thanks," said Jesse. "It's me all today that's the Haveril, an' she married a man name of Conroy."

Barry pondered. "I'd rather you make you nephew a half Haveril," he said.

Thereafter they called each other Cousin Jesse and Cousin Barry, until Jesse took to calling Barry just plain Sundown.

"I'd like to hear about the bandits that chased you up here, Cousin Jesse," said Barry one day.

"I ain't finished with them bandits, 'Sundown,' Jesse said angrily. "Shore, I'll tell you about 'em."

He told his tale forcefully and clearly, and Barry Haveril believed every word of it. There were six of them, said Jesse. They were Dud Walters, a cowboy; Bill and Tom Sadler, ranchers near Tylerville; Sam Johnson, banker and former sheriff and all around crook; Jeff Cody, the gambler; and Dan Hardy. Most folks didn't suspect them for what they were, they were that tricky. But Jesse hadn't been long in it before he seen them when they held up the Cold Springs stage; they'd killed the driver and the guard and got away with the strong box. Then they had seen Jesse Conroy, who just happened to be cutting into the stage road from a side trail, and they knew it was all up unless they rubbed him out.

"I'll get them some day, Cousin Barry," Jesse went on. "You see if I don't. But for a while I had better go slow."

Presently a thin smile loosened his lips as he said idly: "What do you think of this here six-gun of mine, Sundown?"

"I never saw one like that," scrutinized Barry almost reverently. "Try a shot with it," offered Jesse now. "I'll show you."

Barry obeyed; he held the weapon lovingly; he lowered it and raised it just as Conroy had been doing.

"I'll show you," said Conroy again. Barry sat humbly listening as Jesse, leaning against the cabin wall, explained and demonstrated. Instantly he realized that his cousin was a deadly with the Colt as he himself was with his rifle.

Jesse said, "Here's some cat's-ridges," and poured them into Barry's hand. "Load her up, Sundown, an' say: "Yeh c't's have it, Sundown. I'm givin' it to yuh."

Barry loaded and stood there, shells in one hand, gun in the other, and looked at him. He knew that he had heard he words correctly; it must be that they meant something else. Jesse laughed again, his handsome dark eyes flashing.

"Shore," he said. "I'm givin' yuh my gun Cousin Barry. It's yours's right this minute."

Barry looked at him with shining eyes. But that look was only a flooding one since in a flash his eyes returned to the red bottled revolver and improved those like a lover's gun. Then his feint began chaffing in the dead pine needles. He couldn't think of anything to say.

As the days passed, young Conroy grew steady on his legs and his arm's wounds healed and the healthy tan came back into his face. Barry could see the restlessness surge up higher in his every day.

One morning in still dim bluish dawn Jesse Conroy slung his bedroll into bag to his belt, shouldered his cordoba and left.

"So long, Cousin Barry," he said. "So long, Cousin Jesse," said Barry. Barry watched him out of sight, only vaguely wondering were he was going. Then he returned to his cabin and sat on the step and substituted his treasure.

He began thinking of his folk, especially of his sister, little Lucy, who wondered has almost Barbara Stout; had the teacher—lawyer now in long-tailed coat and high hat—married her off?

He missed his pack closed his door, abandoned his rifle, and with the comfortable feet of a heavy long barrel bumping at his hip, turned back toward the Tylerville place. He came within sight of the clearing and the rock-and-log cabin toward the end of the second day; the one that was below the rope of the pines as he slowly it was twilight all about the house and he heard the call and the flickering wing-dip of a first night bark. Otherwise all was very still. He experienced a queer disturbing feeling, a swift conviction that all desertion. The track down the lower meadow and the barrow mound said to the spring house were sweep-grass.

Then he found his mother's letter. Over the five place, a was square in the doorway was a sheet of paper on a nail. Barry took it down and read it by the light of the moon.

The first words were, "To Robert or Baron, whichever comes home first." Barry knew that he was left out of the three sons. The rest of a Barry found, was addressed to Barry's questions for him. First of all Lucy had married Zachary Blount and had gone to live with him in Texas. Zachary was practicing law and was associated with the firm of Blount, Parker Bros. Through Zachary, Judge Parker had got an offer for Barry's father to go into the cattle business with him; on shares it was. So all the family were moving down into the new country, onto one of the biggest cattle ranches in Texas. Then came the scrawl: "Whichever of you boys reads this first, im him leave it here for the other."

Well, his mother and father and his brother Lucy were gone. It was much now. And Robert was somewhere or other.

In the morning he decided to go out of his way a bit in making his return journey. That was because it dawned on Barry that he alone of his family might guess what Robert was up to.

"Anyhow I'll go past Tex Rumph-reys' place," Barry told himself.

Barry happened to know that Robert was very crazy about one of the Rumphreys girls.

So now, turning his back on the Sun Creek Valley, Barry turned into Humphreys' horse ranch. He meant just to droop in and say "Howdy," and ask casually, "Seen any o' my folks lately, Tex?" But there was in the no such casual talk that day.

At the foot of Black Mountain in a peaceful and quiet little whisper of glen about in quivering aspens, he came suddenly, all without warning, upon a tragedy. There was before it only a short time before, surely not more than a day before, had been Robert Haveril.

RURAL CIRCUMLOCUTION

"Oh, what a fancy looking cow!" said the pretty visitor from the city. "Why hasn't it any horns?"

"Those are nanny horns, ma'am," answered the farmer, "why some cows haven't horns. Some are born without horns, and don't have any until late years of their life. Others are dehorned, while other breeds aren't supposed to have horns at all. So you see there are many reasons why cows sometimes don't have horns. But the chief reason that this critter doesn't have horns is that it isn't a cow at all. It's a horse."

Twin thrones graced the Legislative Chamber into this week after the Speaker's Chair which is owned by former Speaker George H. Johnson of Loyalist made a return visit to the Capital. Mr. Johnston was presented with the chair in recognition of his distinguished service thereto on his retirement from political life. A replica was ordered and installed in the Chamber. The Legislative Grounds are now almost ready for the visit of Their Majesties, and gardeners are already moving lawns, trimming turf and nothing out flowering plants for the auspicious occasion. At the same time the Welcome Arch is completed. Instead of the usual type, it makes an imposing spectacle. Around town the spirit of the occasion grows stronger daily. In every night clubs are decked out, swing up, greeting flags and bunting draperies. The stands are completed and now await the final touches and trimmings. All seat spaces are numbered and within each room left for individual holders, there is no doubt that seating accommodation will provide an unobstructed view of the King and Queen.

SUNBURNING IN YOUNG PIGS

Although Alberta is not noted for its sunshine, overdoses of it is young pigs spell loss profit for the owner. Severe cases of sunburn or scalding are becoming fairly rare. However, thousands of young pigs receive distinct set-backs early in life from less much sunshine. General unthriftiness resulting in slow rates of gain means that the pigs will not reach market when they should. A little more consideration and careful planning on the part of the owner may prevent much of this.

Prevention, as in many other cases, pays far better than any treatment later on. White haired animals are very susceptible to the active rays of the sun. However, wide variations occur in certain strains of all breeds, and many colored hogs become sunburned.

Prevention simply consists of the gradual hardening of the young pig to the sun's rays. Tender skinned young porkers, born made in shady quarters and then put out on pasture in the middle of the blistering hot summer day require only a few hours until they are severely burned. Such pigs on their first trip outside, turned out in the lane, may receive only a slight burning, but if during the next few days the period is gradually lengthened, in a very short time they are immune. Because there is shade available in a pasture, it does not mean that the young pigs on their first few days of romping around will use it. Therefore, the man who follow the little extra time and gradually hardens the young animals, receives good dividends for the extra consideration.

The use of mineral oil for sunburnt pigs is recommended and in severe cases of burning, a mild disinfectant followed by an application of oil may be necessary. Labour saving gadgets such as automated sacking which rubs the pigs back when they enter the feeding pen, or sanitized scratching posts are easily and cheaply constructed. The periodical sprayers or even the use of a tin can with the bottom perforated with shingle nail holes, and while the pigs are feeding at the trough takes only a moment and does an effective job.

Most of the good accomplished by such an oil process can be lost if the pigs are allowed to wander through heavy pasture or have access to mud holes where they become coated with slime which dries off their skin as soon as they get in the sun's rays again.

Starting in this Issue!

"INTO THE SUNSET" is the title of our new serial story. The author is Jackson Gregory, well-known writer of such splendid westerns as: "Mountain Man", "The Trail to Paradise", "The Shadow of the Mesa", and many others.

In selecting a western for our new serial, variety was the main consideration. Having recently published a story of a different nature, which by the way, brought forth many favorable comments, we believed a western would be popular among our readers.

"INTO THE SUNSET" comes exceptionally well recommended, and we hope as the story unfolds, readers of the Mercury will enjoy it.

"CANADA CALLING" IN BRITAIN

Our Visit To Mr Olton's Farm

(Fancy Descriptio)

We all got the surprise of our lives when on Thursday our teacher told us that Mr. Oulton was going to take us to his farm. Oh's and ah's were heard as this was announced.

About eleven o'clock Mr. Oulton came and took us down to his farm. No one was hurt going down but by the sound of our shrieks and gurgles you might have thought that we were all being murdered We got down there in a few minutes and all jumped out.

The first thing we saw was an old goose nest, although it was this year's it was not in use as the eggs had hatched. I learned that the eggshells were much like very thin china, if you drop it on a rock it breaks like good china. We saw the goslings, gander and goose. The gander was blessing and squawking about telling the geese that he was better than those human beings. The little gosslings were all orangey-yellow with black spots.

We all moved expectantly towards the ponds. On the way we came across a goose and gander with their goslings. When we picked up the goslings, the gander became extremely angry.

To add to the excitement a pony from a corners was lost. With but little trouble it was found and we proceeded to the ponds.

We saw only one, which had a magnificent tail but he wouldn't flaunt it. We were disappointed but something was in store for us that we hardly expected. When we were at bench the peacock would I'll let you wait until we get that for the story. The peacock is a very beautiful fellow but his voice is terrible. As Mr. Oulton says, "If they were as sqtay as their voice, we wouldn't keep them."

The peacock is the male of geese and it is therefore the one with the brightest colores. It is a brown colour on his back and sides. The tail is a mixture of silver, mostly green and blues. There is a patch on its back where its large tail-feathers grow. The tail of a peacock grows to best one foot a year or ocsen it is nine or ten years old it has a huge tail. Up by his neck is a patch of feathers, which is a bluish green. The neck is the most gorgeous blue. Its neck is rather thick or if it isn't the neck is not for the feathers. A goose has a very slender, finely cut neck while the peacock has a thick neck something like our arm if we held it up and covered it with feathers. The peacock ran off into the trees so we went to see a nest of a goose across the creek. We didn't really go across the creek but if the creek had gone straight we would have had to cross it. We came to the nest an1 the gander came out and avoided us in goose language. The gander told the goose "I can drive him away." Mr. Oulton can understand many of the things which the geese say. Two of the eggs were popped and in one we could hear the small bird peeping. We all "ooohed" back up the trail after saying goodbye to the two geese (I am sure the gander was much relieved by our leaving). We passed a few Bronze turkeys going back to the house. Bronze Goose is not quite as large as the Canada goose. They are pure white except for a buck wedge on the tail.

We went through another gate down to another part of the creek where another pair were nesting. All we could see was the goose's head. Mr. Oulton climbed across the fence and the geese let out a lout one squawk and the gander came. The gander was very good looking like a snake and also intriguing his neck much like a snake.

We left them to go and see some pheasants which were in a wire pen. They were very frightened and flew to the wire until they ran from them came down. The male bird is very beautiful. On his head is a comb which is a bright red, it is like a helmet. The eyes are spotted with the same kind of blue as the peacock's neck. The tail at first looks like one large feather, but at closer view it is one long one, two shorter ones and so on down its back. Just where its tail are some feathers which look like silk. These are a reddish-brown. The back is spotted with reddish brown spots. The legs are black. These birds are two of the seven which hatched from eighteen eggs which Mr. Oulton imported from England. They were supposed to be a larger variety. They were Chinese ring necks. Around their necks were white bands and no crossing or interbreeding could ever get rid of it. The female bird is very dark looking, very much unlike female human beings. Two eggs were found in the pen and Mr. Oulton took them because hens are able to hatch them better than pheasants. Mr. Oulton told us that he had set many loons and that one was nesting near, but we couldn't see it.

Mr. Oulton proposed lunch so we all ate. We had our own lunches so well as milk, popcorn, cookies and candy which Mr. Oulton gave us. When we were just about through one lunch someone said that the peacock was coming to the fence. We all rushed to see and there was the peacock. He was standing with his tail down. The tail is a huge fan opened up. The peacock turned around and we could see the back of his tail. The quills were very strong and looked like slats on a fence. The peacock walked around for awhile then let his tail down.

We wandered around for awhile picking some flowers and having a last look at the peacock. We had just been about ten feet from the fence when we had to get acquainted with the school.

Three running chases were given for Mr. Oulton's benefit and the children say that he richly deserved the chase which he got.

We all settled down and got to work thinking every now and then of the "peacock with his tail down."

SECOND INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS

Barry Hartwell leaves his Texas home to see the country, meets a man who has just been shot through the arm by a bandit, Jesse Cooney. Barry helps take care of his wounded and Jesse gives Barry his gun, a very unusual one. When they part Barry leaves for home but finds the family to be longer there. When he is leaving he suddenly comes across a dead man who turns out to be his brother Robert.

He knew it was Robert the instant he glimpsed the sprawling form, even before he looked for any face, and he knew too that he was dead. So it was a burning eyed, blanched-faced, tragic boy that burst upon the Humphreys, saying thickly as they stared at him:

"He's dead. Robert, he's dead. Somebody killed him! Who? I want to know who!" You tell me Tex Humphreys!"

Molly went back with him and Tex to where the body lay. A Molly who was all melting black eyes from which the tears streamed unceasingly.

Tex sat a long while on his heels, then looked straight into Barry's hardened face.

"He rode off this way like yesterday," he said, speaking softly and drawlingly. "Somebody bush-whacked him. Stood right over yonder by that big tree. Shot him clean through the head."

He got up and moved about, looking for sign. "Here's where he stood Barry. He was afoot; didn't have any hoss. An' Robert did, he was ridin, my Cealy. My boy' hoss, my Mex saddle an' bridle—all gone! Somebody might mebbe thought he was worth killin' for that outfit; somebody afoot that wanted a hoss real bad, somebody mebbe the law was after."

"We c'n follow the trucks," said Barry. "We c'n see which way he rode off."

Tex agreed in all heartiness. They hastened back to Humphreys' ranch-ody!" he said. He gave Barry the for horses They put in a dogged, determined day, and in the end turned back little wiser than when they started.

That night Barry shook his hand at Tex Humphreys' invitation to stay, and turned under the stars toward his own place.

He walked half the night before he rolled exhausted into his blanket and slept. When he awoke he was so stiff and sore that he could scarcely stand, he had less use for a horse than ever before, and vowed that he would never forth another. In a plaid drawn with a chill mountain wind blowing he breakfasted and rolled his pack and went on.

It was almost a day's trip, south and west, to the spot where he had watched the two border cross-breeds engaged in their primitive gold-gleaning operations.

Down on the ravine he set his rifle aside, pulled off his worn boots, rolled up his overalls and went to work. He didn't have a pan as the others had, but he did have big strong capable hands. He found a sand place between two rocks, scooped up a lot of the wet sand and smeared it out thin and smooth on the top of a flatter boulder. Then he began picking up through it, disturbing particles with a horny fingernail, seeing the soft reddish pollute.

Next morning he tried higher up stream. For hours he mounted, try-ing all sorts of places. Before noon he he found a pothole under water at the lower end of a pool. He spent nearly about two hours at that pole, think-ing that he might as well clean it out while he was at it; he could find another nest time. Then figuring that he must have about all 12- gold he would need for the things he wanted in town, he started back rehoused. Hardly started, he stopped and looked back, undecided. He'd want to get a lot of shells for his three -ot gun, a terrible lot of 'em; he wondered whether he had gold enough.

The next morning he set out. It was a long walk to Tylerville; Jesse had told him it must be thirty-forty miles.

Tylerville, a rugged and crooked cow town, sprawled in what had been once known as Cottonwood Flats.

When a hatchboard crew dashing around a corner in an enormous cloud of dust, he drew back against a wall as though afraid of being run down, even on a sidewalk. Then, seeing it clear as it shot on by, he was impressed by its elegance. Two sleek, beautiful matched bays with flashing silver manes drew it, a hand-some figure of a man drove it, a hand-some big blond man.

At his side was a little girl; she looked very little indeed beside the man's imposing build, and about all Barry could make of her as she went past was that she too were blue and that she had a big white hat from which blue ribbons streamed, and that she was laughing.

Men clumped along the sidewalk, most of them dusty and in light-brushed boots with dangling spurs, with big hats, the brims pushed back, and with flapping, open vests. He stopped fascinated before a window full of things to make his mouth water, some of them looked almost too pretty to eat.

Barry went in. At one side was a counter, at the other a series of small booths with low partitions jutting out from the wall to separate them. He sat down and when a waiter came said, after drawing a long breathe:

"I want a hunk o' cheese an' a hunk of white cake that's got lots of eggs an' some sody water."

He had dumped of perhaps half of the cheese and two thirds of the white one, when he saw the big blond man and the little girl come in, they went to a table next to his booth and sat down, the man facing, by the partition. The waiter stood him to serve them.

Barry shifted down the rest of his cake and caught the waiter's eye.

"I didn't know I was eatin' with company," he said, keeping his voice down. "You can take the prize out of this."

He held a little pile of dust and fine grains of gold in his palm. Instinctively he refrained from showing all he had.

The waiter looked startled. "Wish I'd a-stake," he said, and departed. Barry, leaning out of his cubby-hole, saw him go out on the sidewalk and disappear; he was seeking the proprietor.

Presently a stocky, sandy haired man with a keen face and a rather quick stant blink, came and stood over Barry and peered at what was in his hand.

"Two pieces o' fancy cake an' sody!" he said. He poured out the contents of Barry's hand into his own. "All right, buddy; we'll call it square this time," he said.

And then Barry was conscious of the big blond man, the Judge, standing up, towering over the partition. Barry looked straight into a pair of bold, very dark brown eyes.

"What is it, Al?" the Judge asked the proprietor. "Seems to be a bit of gold nest, does it?"

Al whistled softly. "Hello, Judge," he said. "I didn't see you and Miss Lucy."

"I reckon not." The Judge smiled after a fashion to warm a man. At least, as Barry thought. Al said hurriedly:

"I was just goin' to stop out and get it weighed an' I could give this young feller his change."

"Yes," said the Judge. "Sure."

He extended his hand and Al said "Shore, Judge," and gave him the gold. Scarcely glancing at it, the Judge returned it to Barry.

"They right next door into the General Hardware Store," he said. "You can get it weighed there and you'll get honest weight. I'll pay for your lunch here."

"I'm obliged, Judge," said Barry, "but I'd like to pay my own way."

The Judge ignored Barry once Miss Lucy's bright eyes peeking out at him from behind the big man.

"It won't amount to much. I guess," he said, "and you can pay me back. Go ahead into the store; I'm dropping in there myself in a minute."

So Barry thanked him again and took his hat and rifle and went out, conscious all the time of those lovely bright eyes of Miss Lucy's.

"She is real pretty," he thought. "Something like sister Lucy use to be."

It was but a few steps to the store. He stepped in and said to the proprietor: "Judge him? Why, he's Judge Blood! Sure he has. And he can tell me about Lucy and all my folks!"

To the man behind the counter he said, "I want to buy some things. The Judge told me you could weigh my gold for me."

"I shore can if you ain't got so much as to break my casket down," the storekeeper admitted. "What do you want to buy?"

Some shells for my six-gun," said Barry. "This one." He unbolstered it and put it on the counter. "Forty-five," he said.

The storekeeper reached for the gun; he turned it over slowly in his hand, cooming to study it.

"Where'd you get this gun?" he asked.

"It's mine," said Barry. Got any shells for it?"

"Sooner like I've heard of a gun like this before," said the other still turning it over. Don't know what kind of weed this is; mebbe

NEW CHAPTER FOR WINNIPEG GRAIN EXCHANGE

With the advent of the new crop year, operations on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange will be open to individuals as empowered by an appointed by the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada. While this move has been unanimously urged by agrarian organizations for years past and was recommended by Sir Josiah Stamp, who conducted an investigation into future trading in grain in Canada in 1931, no move was made towards that objective until the current session of the federal parliament. As Mr. Justice Turgeon made a similar recommendation after an intensive survey of the Canadian grain trade in 1927 and 28, the government finally decided to make the move. Just how satisfactory the supervision will be only time will tell. The government obviously was not anxious to interfere unduly with the operations of the exchange and will go so far as the United States Grain Futures Act of fifteen years ago when it set up the Grain Futures Administration under Dr. J. W. T. Duvel to supervise trading.

Many grain producers have for years believed that speculative influences work to their disadvantage on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, particularly in periods of declining prices. "Poor cost your dust, young feller, so why don't you sell it?"

This time Barry emptied his pouch on a piece of wrapping paper, making a neat little pile. He then put back his brown but said nothing; he was in charge at the Judge. This time it was the Judge who spoke bright.

"Look here young fellow, I don't know where you got that—"

"It's mine all right," said Barry. To Diphy he said, "Are you goin' to weigh it?"

"But I am going to tell you something." The Judge's voice was compelling and Barry handed into the pair of bold, leaf-brown eyes. "You want the right place when you shovel your gold in the restaurant if you want word of it all over town inside of an hour. Well it's your business and you look dry behind the ears." He turned and went out, merely saying over his shoulder from the door: "If you get in trouble it's your doing, not mine, but you know that well enough you're a friend of mine. Pi Diphy."

"Who's he?" asked Barry of the storekeeper. The other stared.

"Shore," said the latter. "Don't know Judge Parker Blue."

"Thought so," nodded Barry. "How much is money does it weigh?"

"Four hundred fifty dollars," snorted the storekeeper. "Want to take it all out in ex'change, huh?"

"Shore," said Barry, using it. "Then I'll do some buyin'."

BOY SCOUTS IN UNEXPECTED PLACES

The following story of a happening in India was related by Mrs. W. C. Blisbel, a Girl Guide leader of Victoria, B. C., and was sent in by her from clothes from Agra to see the town of Akbad, when in front of me appeared a squad of fuzzy-wuzzy Scouts. As we drew near I found they were Scouts and came to a camp. As I passed, I caught the eye of one boy, and gave the Girl Guide (and Scout) salute immediately my tonga was surrounded by about 30 huge Pathan boys, all Scouts of the same. The Scouter in charge spoke a few words to me and the boys stood at attention, and the boys and I entered into an animated conversation. They were extremely interested to hear that I came from far off Canada, and particularly interested to know all about camping in our country. I had a chocolate, as they arranged themselves in a half circle, with the Union Jack in the centre, while I photographed them. They accompanied me all the way into the magnificent tomb, and three of them escorted me through it. The happiness was greater because there was what a potent thing is the Girl Guide and Boy Scout salute.

DURAM WHEATS AND THEIR UTILIZATIONS

(Carl L. Alsberg in Wheat Studies)

Durum wheat, a distinct species, probably originated in Northern Africa, where it still predominates. Because some strains are resistant to rust and drought, it is grown in many semi-arid regions, for example, the Mediterranean basin, southeastern Russia, western Asia, British India, the great Plains regions of Western Canada and of the northern United States, and Argentina. Elsewhere it occurs but to of slighter importance. It probably constitutes about 8 to 9 per cent of the world's wheat crop.

Because of its yellow color and its streaminess, durum is the premier raw material for the semolina used in alimentary pastes of the macaroni type. Though its hardness varies with climate and variety, other things being equal, it is the hardest of all cultivated wheats. In recent years quantitative methods for evaluating its quality for macaroni have been developed. These measure color, mechanical strength, and cooking quality of macaroni. Six bread wheats durums have been also esteemed, except in Russia, in part because most varieties yield dextrose and less puros leaves, in part because their flour is of creamy yellow color, a defect which can now be overcome by chemical bleaching.

When their price is favorable, durums now tend to be used by millers in western Europe as "push filler wheats" to the extent of 10 to 20 per cent, for improved methods of tempering wheat have been also difficult in mill. The pure-oval "grazing" power and do best blended with wheats deficient in this respect. Except in regions where they are the principal wheat and the respective of durum-cultivation with respect to baking quality is not great, they are never used alone for flour, not even in Russia. Their price does not parallel that of other wheats because of their specialized use for macaroni. Sometimes they bring considerable premiums, and sometimes they are discounted.

IN THOUSANDS OF CANADIAN homes, life insurance is the money pays the bills—helps to support widows and children—and provides for old age.

Life insurance dollars buy the food for three square meals a day. They buy clothing and other necessities of life. They pay the rent and fuel bills or mortgage interest on homes. They give children an education and a mother's care.

Each year, life insurance policy-owners and their beneficiaries in Canada receive 150 million dollars—five hundred thousand dollars every working day—twenty thousand dollars every hour.

And it is significant that more than 75% of all life insurance payments are made to living policyholders.

THE ROYAL VISIT—

IN COMMON with every district in Northern and Central Alberta this district sent a full quota of visitors to Edmonton on Friday last to celebrate the visit of Their Majesties to Alberta's Capital City. To all those who went the day will be long remembered. There were of course many outstanding things connected with the day, and each individual gathered his or her own potent impressions. First and foremost was the friendliness and charm of Their Majesties. Even among those whom royalty had hitherto made little impression, there was a cordiality that was remarkable. As Their Majesties rode slowly through the lanes of cheering subjects and the King by a formal salute and the Queen by a charming smile and a wave of the hand, acknowledged the cheers, every single person in the throng felt as if the salute and wave of the hand was for them personally, and they cheered more lustily. It is hard to explain but it was so.

The weather was perfect. The human spectacle on Kingsway was one that will never be forgotten by those thousands who were there. Many years ago in the market places of the old countries, brightly colored lithographs were sold. These pictures often depicted royalty on state occasions, and flags and decorations, blue sky with fleecy clouds were parts of the picture. And the writer has often looked at these and thought—nothing could be quite so perfect as this. But Friday's spectacle on Kingsway was even more so. Two miles of avenue, with humanity filled grandstands on each side, six tiers high, topped with a profusion of flags which a pleasant breeze kept straight out from poles and staffs, with sunshine, blue sky and fleecy clouds, made a spectacle absolutely outstanding.

Another striking feature of the day was the general good humor of the crowds. Somebody bumped you, it didn't seem to matter, you bumped somebody and it didn't matter either. Somebody stepped on your toes and you immediately forgave them, you stepped on somebody's toes and they were quite nice about it too. Going in and out on the train one was impressed by the good nature of the crowds. Whatever else the Royal Visit did, it made people happy and carefree for a time. Not since the pall of gloom which fell upon this country in 1929-30, have we seen such light heartedness among crowds of people.

Out of Europe came the statement, attributed to Hitler that the democracies did not like Germany annexing territory without bloodshed. A statement which, after viewing a series of maps depicting territorial changes in Europe for the past thousand years, is of special significance. Of course, democracies do not like bloodshed any more than totalitarian states. In Great Britain newspapers are expressing amazement at the warmth of reception accorded the King and Queen and a phrase, more happy than literally true, is Their Majesties "conquest" of Canada. The Royal Visit to Canada has been a coup, it of a kind. A conquest by a smile and stately dignity, a conquest by charm and natural poise, a conquest by thoughtfulness and consideration for others—a conquest of love.

WHAT DO YOU MEAN—NEARLY?—

IN A RECENT editorial written by Editor Horton and published in the Vegreville Observer, reference is made to past Liberal conventions. One is cited at which feeling between two groups supporting different candidates ran high. Mr. McCauley of Tofield was chairman of the convention, and, the balloting being even it fell to his lot to cast the deciding vote. Of this, says the Observer, the supporters of the losing candidate "nearly" scalped the chairman.

Those who have known Mr. McCauley for quite a number of years wonder at the word "nearly". They think that losing delegates must have done a pretty good job!

From an American Editor's Travel Diary—

(Christian Science Monitor)

I wish some people who are opposing the admission of refugee children to the United States could hear the stories refugee workers here tell from their own experience. That parents can give up their children never expecting to see them again, indicates what the conditions must be. Heard a man tell the other day of receiving a letter saying, "The stamp on the envelope commemorates our Leader's birthday and you may like it for your collection." Acting on the suggestion, he took it off and found underneath, "We are starving." D.M.R.

LAMENT

I think that I shall never be
A national celebrity.
Of that there seems to be small hope,
I'll never rise to praise a soap.
My fame will never be so great
That I'll be advertising bait.
No one will ever pay me cash
For praising cans of succotash.
No advertiser seems to care
Whatever I put on my hair.
For this I am not great enough,
I'm just the chap who buys the stuff.

THE WEEK IN EDMONTON

Among the more pleasing sights this greeted the eyes of Their Majesties as they entered the Legislative Building was the gorgeous display of bloomers and foliage banked around a flood-lit, playing fountain in the rotunda immediately in front. It was a thing of beauty, and all day Wednesday and Thursday visitors to the building paused to admire this lovely tribute to the Royal Couple.

******

It was a tribute to the Alberta home-maker, too, in that the great masses of bloomers were composed of what nearly must be the finnish uniforms of every Canadian woman—the plucky, ubiquitous gerunium.

******

Geraniums of deep red, full and pale pink, with white banked variegated, provided the main tones of the display. What these were woodland fern of the province's capital, bringing two-toned cattels and pink primroses. Colored floral lights were hidden among the foliage of red and purple-leaved decorative grasses and lichens were banked around the base.

******

In the lush beauty of the fountain's apparent a background of green and stems, were perennial representatives of the province's wild flowers, including fish. They were five parsh, selected for their beauty and brilliance of color natures. More spectacular fish though excellent bathers in their natural state, they were subjected to the strain of a few hours of ebicsiand in the Legislative Building. Visitors were privileged to appear before Their Majesties.

******

Another interesting fact recorded pertains to the unemployment situation. It is revealed that for the period of January 1st to April 1, Alberta was the only Province which showed a decrease. Labor Gazette for the province of 2.84, Saskatchewan registered an increase of 94.69 unemployed. Quebec 36.19, and other provincial figures ranged from 4.18 to 11.83.

******

University week opened grandmonously with the Royal Visit, and a number of prominent people came to Edmonton to enjoy both attractions. Eight days of recreation and education are offered, including lectures in agriculture, household science and the arts. Public schools, ships and prizes worth $250 are available to students between the ages of 18 and 35.

******

Of interest to motor dwellers, too, is the announcement that the School of Community Life will once again be in session at Olds from July 3 to 15. The courses include international affairs and current history, co-operation, rural sociology, dramatics and homecraft. Age groups between 17 and 70 is invited to attend. Opened first in 1937 as an experiment in adult education, the school of community registered an immediate success. Classes will be held in the Agricultural School at Olds.

******

Interesting facts released by the Department of Agriculture this week disclose that Alberta's rural population of half a million persons five on farms numbering 101,000, and that in 1938, their production of rural wealth was valued at $176,686,102.

******

Grain growers produced $168,000,000 of this total. They marketed 145,000,000 bus. wheat, 101,000,000 bus. oats, 32,500,000 bus. barley, rye, flax. Forty-two per cent of the wheat marketed in the first seven months of the season graded No. 1 Northern or better.

******

Improvement in live stock finishing was noticeable in the proportion of "select" hogs marketed—32.56 per cent as against only 9.06 per cent six years previously.

******

All records were broken by Alberta sugar beet growers during 1938. They produced 180,000 tons beets, which in turn produced $1,320,000 a sweet little return in any sugar man's language.

******

In other branches of agriculture Alberta farmers made gains. They stood first in all weed marketings, including sheep, poultry and cream third in mirror. Dairymen, poultrymen, beekeepers and fur farmers all registered fine scores for the year. Superintendent of Alberta's travelling clinic on its annual crusade against sickness is attracting attention here. The unique enterprise is only one of many that have been established in Alberta, and the general policy of taking medicine to the people in rural areas has brought enquiries from many parts of the world.

******

Recently the provincial department of health was invited to assist the dominion in the establishment of a new health division which is in operation in close collaboration with the various provincial units, along the lines mapped out by Alberta.

the steal market bird. There are four grades—Special A, B, and C. Birds banded as "Specials" are practically perfect in every way, while those graded "C" are good commercial birds.

******

During this spring the Poultry Branch inspected 1051 turkeys, and graded 18 Specials, 317 A's, 481 B's, and 160 C's. The indication that the percentage of "Specials" is low because of the high standards required for the Special grade.

The policy has been in operation about ten years, and the steady improvement in the quality of Alberta turkeys is proof that the banding policy is justified.

LINDBROOK COMMUNITY CLUB NEWS

The monthly meeting of the L.C.C. was held at the home of Mrs. W. McHeffey. Fifteen members and six guests were present. Guests being Mrs. Lancaster, Mrs. McKenzie, Myrtle Logan, Mrs. McKinley and daughter who at present are guests of Miss L. Mawdsley and Mary Wehner of South Cooking Lake who was at that time staying with her sister, Mrs. W. L. Gill.

The meeting was carried out much the same as usual. The roll call was answered by Household Hints and almost everyone answered to roll.

Discussion of spreads took place. The members are now working on Applique Blocks which will be raffled at the next meeting. The winning lady to have the complete memorial supplied and she will be able to add the blocks to her own lilting. The money will be for a needy cause. There is also another quilt to be made later on.

After the business, games were played (tests of skill.) Prizes went to Mrs. Preden and Thelma Kerriman and to Gladys Wetherill and Mary Waiers. Mrs. Evans and Bruce Wardle also lucky enough to tie a grain but, again unlucky in the draw

As this was the week of the Royal Visit, conversation kept going to that subject. Thus the roll call for next month will 'is on that same topic'

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. R. Smith, Mrs. Harrison assistant hostess. The reporter wanted remember who was to provide the entertainment so will mention that next time.

A very lovely luncheon was served by Mrs. McHeffey and Miss Morden.

ROYAL VISIT COMMITTEE GIVE THANKS

Fullest appreciation and sincere thanks for the wonderful co-operation given by all citizens in the Province of Their Majesties, King George the Sixth and Queen Elizabeth to Edmonton, Friday, June 2nd., was voiced last Saturday by P. W. Abbott, K.C., chairman of the Royal Visit Committee in Edmonton.

All members of the committee, A. W. Hodgson, city engineer; Milton Martin and Frank Pepper, Edmonton businessmen, and C. R. H. Monkman, Deputy Minister of Highways joined in the announcement. They further pointed with pride to the fact that the co-operation given by the public had made possible the crowd of no serious accidents or other accidents to mar the unprecedented event last Friday.

assisted by the little Miss McKinley. Afterwards members departing for home.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

The time for summerfallowing, that most essential operation of western agriculture, is with us again.

Summerfallowing is an ancient practice In most countries it is practiced only to destroy weeds, for weeds undoubtedly are a most effective means of depriving the soil of precious moisture, and so causing a heavy loss in crop yield. In western Canada, however, summerfallowing is usually done for an even more important reason, which is to conserve an extra year's supply of moisture, and so to gain a better assurance of

"We are still receiving congratulations for the display of welcome we presented here in Alberta, and I want to pass this credit on to those who helped make it possible, the citizens of this province," Mr. Abbott concluded.

TRUCK OVERTURNS

While traveling on the north road on Friday the Hardy truck, driven by Don Hardy overturned completely, coming to rest on its wheels. The three occupants, Don Hardy, Jos Scott and Jim Mean were thrown out, but fortunately suffered only minor injuries. The truck was damaged somewhat.

A Four Poster Bed-

You know, one of those massive things that had curtains round it and "valences" from the bed to the floor. Grandmother and grandfather believed they were the last word in nocturnal comfort, and in their day and age, grandmother and grandfather were quite right.

Now, we don't expect you would have one of these for sale. If you possessed one you would likely want to keep it. But among your possessions you probably have something that to you or your family has outlived its usefulness, even though quite good.

A piece of farm machinery, plow, disc, mower, rake, binder or even a tractor that could be turned into money, if the right person knew you had it for sale.

And household effects—there is always someone on the look-out for a bargain. A young couple that needs that extra table, stove, chairs or any one of the many articles of furniture found in the average home.

A Mercury Classified Ad will bring the right parties together as quickly and more cheaply than any other medium in this district. The rates are low. The average of success high.

LINDBROOK

Most of the folks here managed to get up to the city for the King and Queen's visit and are still talking about the same. Next morning at 6 30 a.m. a crowd assembled on the station to see the Royal train go through. It was too early to expect it to slow up, so we hear that it didn't stop till Wainwright was reached despite crowds at other points. Ahh, we understand that His Majesty's orders were to show up if a crowd had collected, but it wasn't done this trip, possibly some officials had something to do with Rules and by, for at some points the crowds were up to large

We hear that Mr. Chas. Blake is much better and here's hoping the improvement continues.

Miss Agnes McHeffey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William McHeffey, is home again as well as ever again after her operation for appendicitis

Mumps is still rabtro prevalent even some grown-ups getting it now

The Lake beaches are in full swing now, altho it would be a lot better if these rootfcrndsd showers would let up

The sheep population are discarding their winter overcoats now, meaning that shearing is under way.

Mrs. Dolly Wrslake is at present recuperating at the home of her parents after recent illness We hope that her recovery will be both sure and speedy

Mrs. Howard Stine is at present a patient in an Edmonton hospital; we hope that she will soon be home O.K.

SYNOPSIS

Barry Haverford leaves his Texas home to see the country, meets a man who has just been shot who turns out to be a cousin of his, Jesse Cressy. Barry helps take care of his cousin and Jesse gives Barry his gun, a very unusual one. When they part Barry leaves for home but finds the family is no longer there. When he is leaving he suddenly comes across a dead man who turns out to be his brother Robert Barry starts searching for the murderer and runs into the man who is responsible for the murder. In the ensuing fight Barry is shot but after continuing his search. He finds a good spot, gets gold and goes to Ty, a bottle to get money for it. There he meets Judge Blue and his daughter Lucy, who help him to get back for his gold. Judge Blue also tells him that the gun Jesse gave him is the gun of a murderer known as the Kinnon kid.

He bought as much ammunition for his six-gun as he thought he could carry handily, then a plain cartridge belt which he filled and buckled around him, and then turned to a gun rack that had caught his eye. He took down—for after another of a half a dozen carbines, fitting them to his shoulder, pondering the heft of them. The one he finally selected went out with him; as he did a second cartridge belt filled with shells for it.

When he came to a point opposite the hardware store, he noted that a horse and two had gathered there. A hay mare, powerfully shouldered, with a bobtored gun at each hip, shivered through the press, saw Barry, and made a purposeful bee line to him His two big thumbs were hooked into his belt.

"Where do you think you're going?" he asked bluntly.

Barry looked at him. "Who're you that's askin'?"

"I'm Ed Brawley, an' I'm sheriff here, an' I'm askin' where you got that gun?"

"It's mine," said Barry.

"Yeah?" said Brawley good humoredly. "Well, s'pose you come along with me; we'll squat an' chin about things. Come ahead."

Barry nodded and swung into step with him; with the crowd eyeing them they were just turning into a narrow frame building with the sign, Sheriff's Office, painted over it, when Barry saw the buckboard with the two gleaming bays swing around the corner and come speeding down the street.

"Just a minute, Sheriff!" he said. "I've got some business with the Judge."

The Judge saw him and pulled up in such fashion as almost to set his two boys on their haunches. Barry stepped into the road and with one hand on a wheel looked up into the Judge's steady leaf-brown eyes.

"I forgot to pay for my lunch today, Judge," he said. "How much?"

The Judge laughed and said, "Shucks," and then, seeing his man as Barry's dark eyes, no less steady than his own, said, "I gave the man a dollar."

Barry, fishing among coin in his pocket, brought forth a silver dollar and proffered it; the Judge, while and reins in one hand, extended the other and accepted the money.

"There's one more thing" Barry added "I guess you can tell me where I can find my folks. My father's Ben Haverell, and my sister Lucy married Zachary Blount and—"

"Well, well!" exclaimed Judge Blue. He turned toward the sheriff "Haven't got my young friend here in tow, have you, Ed?" he asked blandly.

"Sure do," said Brawley, very blunt. "There's some questions—"

"About that gun of his maybe?" suggested the Judge. Brawley nodded. "Well then!" said the Judge. "There's more guns than one with a fancy butt, Ed. How about turning this young man over to me? I know all about his people. His father and brother are running my new place for me; his sister Lucy is married to my assistant Bert Blount, and she and my Lucy are like two sisters. I'll be responsible for him, Ed. If you like, you can ramble over to my place and talk things over with him. Pay, come up for supper!"

The sheriff looked doubtful. "If it was anybody but you, Judge—"

The Judge laughed. "But it happens to be me, Ed." To Barry he rallied cheerily: "Hop up, Haverell. There's room here for the three of us."

Barry looked at the sheriff; Brawley drew back to the sidewalk.

"Go 'head," he said briskly; and to the Judge. "I'll take you up on that supper invite, Judge. Got the same coach?"

Never in his life had Barry travelled with such breathtaking speed; he began to think that horses were all right after all. They came to the wide open gate. It didn't make two inches. Then the big bright house loomed above them; the horses swung around to the right and were pulled up again in front of a cabin that might have been a hotel

The Judge threw the reins and sprang down nimbly, arms outstretched to Miss Lucy. She jumped into them with that gay little laugh of hers that was all tinkly music.

But Barry did not hear it. He was right where he was, making no move to get down.

"Well, young Haverell," called the Judge. "Light down and make yourself at home," still Barry sat, as in a daze. The Judge looked at him in perplexed fashion as did Lucy and the two men. "Oh, Haverell?" said the Judge again. "What's up? You look like——"

"Oh!" said Barry, and climbed down over the buckboard wheel.

"Anything wrong?" inquired Judge Blue.

"No," said Barry, "I just sort of got to thinking, that's all."

And he still was thinking as he followed the Judge and Lucy into the cool, imposing white palace trimmed in its bright blue. He was glad that queer things did happen now and then, and he was glad that things were sometimes not like: Here in Judge Parker Blue's stable was Tex Hendry's fancy saddle mare; here was his brother Robert had been shot. The saddle looked at home here, too, with a man shining it up.

"Yes youngsters comes yourselves for a while when you're ready for a ramble," said the Judge. "I'll be with you shortly."

"When are we going to Barry's ranch where my folks are?" asked Barry.

"Right after supper, son. Meantime you can see your sister; I'll send a man with word that you're here."

Do you want me to show you around the place? The flower garden and the vegetable patch and the corrals and barns—"

"Yes," said Barry, and added, "I liked your stable."

So first of all he carried him away to the stable. Barry led the way inside, standing straight in the harness room where the men were busy at work doing something with a saddle was bent at his work.

"That's a pretty fine saddle," said Barry.

Lucy, seeing it for the first time, said, "Why! it's the loveliest saddle I've ever seen! Whose is it, Andrew?"

"Belongs to a stranger," said Andrew. "The Judge maybe knows him. He came in late last night, stranger, saddles account of the cinch; this one bein' ready to hand, so on she went. He'd be back tonight.

"A man ought to have a pretty fine horse to match up that saddle," suggested Barry.

"Let's go see it," invited Lucy. "Is it in the corral, Andrew?"

"It must be that same," said Lucy pointing. "That high-headed black with the white saddle marks. It's not one of ours."

Barry didn't say anything. Lucy was right. That was a high-headed pride among his saddle horses. That was the horse which, only a few days ago, had carved Robert Haverell to his death.

The Judge had a scrap of paper in his hand. He waved it toward Barry, saying as he came on: "I'm sorry you won't be able to see your sister today, young Haverell. There was a note on my desk when I came home, by Zachary Blount; he went to Pride's Valley this morning on a bit of business for me, something that looked fancy about the deed in a new ranch I just bought. He'll be back tonight. But they will be back tomorrow or the next day."

Barry was looking at the horse again

"You're looking at some high-class horse flesh there, Haverell," said the Judge.

Barry nodded. He wanted to ask about that high-headed black, but hesitated. Blind instinct, unable to tortion—he didn't know what—made him move as cautiously as all his true kindred, forest wild things usually.

Lucy asked "Who's the stranger, Daddy, that owns that one? He's got the most gorgeous saddle I ever saw."

The Judge looked the horses over. "That black?" he said. "Oh, yes. It belongs to a young cowboy who rode in late last night. He had to go on and asked to leave his horse here until he came back. Where'd you see his saddle?" he asked.

"Andrew was fixing the cinch. It's a fancy Mexican saddle, and Andrew gave all the silver work a polish; it hurts your eyes to look at it."

"Let's go to the house," said the Judge. It's most supper time.

But it was not supper time, and they loafed comfortably on the shady front porch basking down over Tylersville.

"Now the is it out to the ranch where my folks are?" Barry asked without withdrawing his supremely keen gaze from the bustling distance.

"It's inside thirty miles," said the Judge. "That little span of mine will do it in less than three hours. We start right after supper."

But they didn't get right after supper, nor did they go at all. The three were dining at a long table that would have seated a score when a man rode up from Tylersville for word with Judge Blue. The Judge nodded to him, and returned about his business. "Try got to see a man in town," he said. "Go ahead with supper; I'll finish when I get back. I ought to be with you in half an hour."

After an hour of waiting Barry and Lucy were sitting on the front porch. Lucy had conducted him to a pleasant room where there were books and a Judge Blue. The Judge surprised, and at first had chattered like a magpie. Then, as the hour began to lag, he, too, and at first, he had listened meagre ly, and had lapsed into silence abruptly. Behind her the insistent and crowd out and clevernt little thing in the room.

When the Judge's voice said, "Why, Barry!" Barry turned to find Judge Blue standing in the doorway. Jumped, for they had not heard him come in. He leaned his hat to the table and came to the two. He smiled. "We'll get first thing in the morning after breakfast," he said.

Ten minutes later Barry was alone in his room. He extinguished his light and went to his window; he stood there a long while looking out over the dim bulk of the mountain under the stars.

Something was wrong and he knew it. It was not only an uneasy suspicion but a positive certainty. "I reckon no one will hear me now," decided Barry, and crawled out through the window, dropping noiselessly to the ground.

He stepped softly through the dark, making a rounded circle of the house to assure himself that the rooms were all dark. He reached the stable. Near the big double doors was a bench under a tree. He sat down there and he did his best to bend down to the butt of the new six-gun; he dozed, started wide awake and dozed again a dozen times before the soft beat of shod hoofs stiffened his entire attention.

He saw the dark form of a man and horse coming on from beyond the stable, a single silhouette dim against the darkness.

The rider came down with a subdued jingle of spurs at the stable door. He swung down softly and didn't turn Barry's way. When he got the door open and led the horse inside. Barry quickly and cat-like followed.

When the lantern at the harness room door was lighted and swung up on a nail Barry saw that it was Jesse Cressy.

"Hello, Cousin Jesse," he said in a quiet voice.

QUEER RACE HORSE AFTER SEEING KING

Callander, Ont., June 1.—Strange, by allend for a day while the Dionne Quintuplets made their first trip into the outer world, the nursery of the Dafoe Hospital is ringing again to the prattle of five little girls who have a new and absorbing subject to discuss—their King and Queen.

It isn't every child who has a real King for a guardian, and the Quints —who were five years old last Tuesday—are old enough to know it. They know, too, that they came through their Private Command Audience with the Sovereigns at Toronto with flying colors and that everybody in Callander, from their parents and Dafoe down to the bemibbed villager is mighty proud of them.

Second only to their meeting with King George and Queen Elizabeth, in the conversation of the famous sisters, is their first automobile ride, which took them from the hospital to the Callander Station, and a train trip from Toronto overnight to the Ontario Parliament Buildings for the Royal Audience. The special motorcycle escort first piloted the car, ed by S. B. McLaughlin, President of General Motors of Canada, and Col. Laughlin Rickie of similar make to chauffeur the King and Queen for their Canadian tour.

The interest and satisfaction in the automobiles expressed by the excited quints as they swarmed all over the cars' interiors, was considered important to the adult members of the party, as it had just been announced that Dionnes, discoverers of Calpolonic Coach emblem which is used on a Fisher Body trade mark, and wears—I know H N was the King's coat—Furnas.

ACTUAL FARM EXHIBITED AT WORLD'S FAIR

One of the most unique and outstanding exhibits at the New York World's Fair is that of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company and its worldwide organization which is represented by one of the finest exhibits in this panorama of industrial science and greatness.

The Firestone exhibit building and grounds covers three and ai half acres, and depicts a most fascinating story of rubber in visual form. It also includes a full scale tire factory in operation, producing a tire every four minutes, and, in addition, displays demonstrating the essential part rubber has come to play in everyday life.

Probably the most unique and appealing part of the great Firestone exhibit is the actual life-size reproduction of a thriving farm, live stock, farm hands and all. In the midst of a rural exposition scene theme is ultra modern, this farm provides an object grain from Firestone plantations and gives glimpses of millions. Through the Farmyard flows a real stream crossed by a covered bridge. Cattle, sheep, pigs, chickens, ducks and other buildings of a typical farm occupy the central portion of the exhibit. This part of the exhibit demonstrates how the farm has become modernized by the introduction of machinery. Even to every kind of wheeled farm implement and mills mentioned in the fact that it was Harvey S. Firestone who pioneered the rubber tire for farm use. Any person desiring to attend the World's Fair will be well advised to visit this great exhibit where a warm welcome awaits them.

A Fall Boy

"Well, Bobby," said the mother to her little son who had just returned from the children's party, "I hope you behaved yourself."

"Oh, yes," replied the boy.

"And you remembered to say 'Yes, please,' and 'No thank you,'?" she asked.

"I didn't say 'No, thank you,' but I said 'Yes, please,' every time," replied the child.

RELIEF—

ONE OF THE greatest problems that has grown up around municipal administration during the past ten years is that of relief. The prosperous twenties with the horrible let down of the early thirties, has brought about a condition that is becoming more and more difficult to contend with.

Just how great a change has come over the Dominion of Canada can be illustrated by a personal experience of the writer. During the winter of 1906-7, at Croydon, near London, England, I attended a lecture on Canada. The speaker spoke in glowing terms of the Dominion, praising its forests, fields and fisheries. "But" he said, and here he was very emphatic "there are no poor houses. In Canada a man gets on or gets out." A lot of water has flowed under the bridge since the winter of 1906-7. The development that has taken place; a major war has been fought; prosperity reigned only to be dethroned by depression; and a relief problem such as the speaker in England never even dreamed of has come into existence. There is no question at all that in a country buoyed up by prosperity and suddenly dropped into depression, relief was needed. To a very large extent we are all creatures of environment and there was nothing to indicate to the average person that economic conditions prevailing in the twenties would not be prolonged indefinitely. It could hardly be expected that all people would be students of history, and from history know that economic conditions affecting peoples, like the weather, are subject to fluctuation, first one way and then another. Therefore relief to those people caught in the whirlpool of economic distress was a vital necessity. And it can be said, on the whole, Canada rose to the occasion, and while perhaps relief has not been as liberal as in the United States, millions of dollars have been spent for relief purposes for this purpose.

But there is something about relief—the receiving of relief — that is not quite sound. We freely subscribe to the affirmative answer to the age old question, "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" But we do not subscribe to the belief, "I am my brother's dependent." We believe it only right and proper that Canada through its various public bodies should come to the aid of people when economic distress is real and vital. But we also believe that relief should never be viewed as just something to be taken if available. Great nations are built up by millions of subjects contributing something to the whole, never by millions of subjects taking something from the whole. Moreover, strange as it may seem, to those who give most, most is given.

When attending Council meetings one is confronted with the relief problem time and time again. Councillors as a class are very human, most of them have families and families of their own, and they view applications for relief with genuine sympathy. But the situation has become so grave that they are compelled to exercise extreme caution and give not as much as they would like to, but as little as they dare. Old folk, those still under the old age pension age, but who have made their contribution to life, invariably receive sympathetic consideration, though even here there are often children who should feel privileged to help carry the burden of the old folk who carried their burdens for many years. Families in which there are young children also receive sympathetic consideration, assistance to such families sometimes going to surprising lengths.

Sometimes, when we try to follow the ramifications of national finance, we feel tempted to believe that it does not matter. Perhaps it would not, at least not so much, if all relief payments came out of the federal treasury. But they do not, and municipalities are bound by the same financial laws as individuals. They must receive in order to give—dollar for dollar.

It has been predicted for some years past that a new era of prosperity was due to arrive about 1940. No less an authority than Mr. J. M. Keynes, writing of conditions in England, says "all plans and special provisions for dealing with this problem (unemployment) should be dropped forthwith as being a waste of time and money." Mr. Keynes' opinion is based on conditions particularly British, but those movements have a habit of spreading, and it is quite possible Canada too may be due for a more prosperous period. Should this come about the relief problem would naturally become less acute, and it may so happen that the same sturdy individual independence that contributed so much to Canada's development will return again.

Nice Gardening

"How did your potato crop turn out, old chap?" asked one amateur gardener of his neighbor.

"Splendid," replied the other. "Some were as big as marbles, some were as big as peas, and, of course, there were quite a lot of little ones."

Willie (reading Monitor article on India): "What's an Untouchable?"
Dad: "It's a guest towel."

FEED FOR HOGS

A question which is frequently asked is whether it pays or not to grind grain for hogs. The question is of special interest in times of low prices for grain and hogs, states R. R. Wilson, Dom. Experimental Station, Lacombe, Alta. In experiments conducted at this station in 1926 and 1933 to compare the values of ground and whole grains it was found that ground grain secured considerably better results. The chop-fed pigs made 31 per cent higher daily gains than the whole-grain-fed lot. In addition to this, the whole grain would not produce the flesh required for select bacon hogs and the whole grain-fed pigs had to be fed chop to finish them. These results would indicate that there is enough saving through grinding the farm grown grains to make such preparation decidedly profitable. It is considered best to grind wheat to a coarse chop, barley medium, and oats fine. If grinding is not done it tends to form a sticky mass when moist rations are observed it and consequently is not relished by the pigs. The habit of eating barley when coarsely ground is not easily overcome by the pigs if they once manage to root them out.

In the earlier days it was generally accepted that ground grain only for hogs would be improved by cooking, but experimental work and practical experience has limit that the common grains are more economically fed without cooking. Certain roots, such as potatoes that are better adapted by it, and hardly be expected that all people would be students of history, and from history know that economic conditions affecting peoples, like the weather, are subject to fluctuation, first one way and then another. Therefore relief to those people caught in the whirlpool of economic distress was a vital necessity. And it can be said, on the whole, Canada rose to the occasion, and while perhaps relief has not been as liberal as in the United States, millions of dollars have been spent for relief purposes for this purpose.

But there is something about relief—the receiving of relief — that is not quite sound. We freely subscribe to the affirmative answer to the age old question, "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" But we do not subscribe to the belief, "I am my brother's dependent." We believe it only right and proper that Canada through its various public bodies should come to the aid of people when economic distress is real and vital. But we also believe that relief should never be viewed as just something to be taken if available. Great nations are built up by millions of subjects contributing something to the whole, never by millions of subjects taking something from the whole. Moreover, strange as it may seem, to those who give most, most is given.

LOCALIZED DRIVES AUGMENT "CANADA CALLING" CAMPAIGN IN BRITAIN

Supported by the Lord Mayor, the Chamber of Commerce and many local organizations, the "Canada Calling" just concluded in the City of Hull, England, was invaded by thousands of housewives interested in Canadian foodstuffs, according to D. G. Keith, Canadian Government Trade Publicity Officer in London.

Typical of localized drives which are being launched in all large population centres is the British Isles and augmenting the general "Canada Calling" campaign conducted by the Dominion Government's Department of Trade and Commerce, the "Canada Shop" in Hull had the co-operation of the City Council.

Mr. Keith stated that upon completion of arrangements for the occupation of the shop in the centre of the Hull shopping area, United Kingdom importers of Canadian food products were circularized and many took advantage of the opportunity to co-operate. Wholesale distributors aided the effort, and an impressive reproduction of Canadian products in retail newspapers was the chief medium used to invite housewives to visit the shop, while street car, bus and billboard advertising carried "Buy Canadian" messages.

To ensure further interest in the shop a window display competition was conducted, Classes A and B being restricted to co-operative and wholesale stores and classes C and D larger independent stores. Mr. Keith stated that the standard of window displays were discovered among the 342 entries received.

In addition to slides shown in a number of cinemas "Canada Calling" also co-operation of the Hull Education authorities was also enlisted, he stated. As a result, lectures illustrated by coloured films were presented at four Hull theatres and attended by approximately 11,000 school children. Some 1,200 class rooms in various Hull schools were attractively decorated with posters advertising Canadian foodstuffs, and copies of the Maple Leaf Canadian Recipe Book, were distributed among the various centres, while the senior schools were supplied with copies of "Canada 1939". With the co-operation of the press, a painting competition was conducted among the school children, Mr. Keith intimated, the subject being the "Canada Calling" large amount figures.

Mr. Keith revealed that a total of 49,000 Canadian Recipe books were distributed by the Canada Shop during the twelve days it was open. At the same time, 16,572 individual samples of Canadian foods were sold amounting in value to over $1,500. As a "follow-up" to the Canada Shop successful cookery demonstrations were conducted at the Balmoral Hall for four days with capacity gatherings of Hull housewives attended.

The "Canada Calling" campaign in Hull, which has been selected as one of the most carefully planned trade crusades ever launched by a British Dominion in the Motherland, is forging ahead with steadily increasing momentum, according to Mr. Keith.

As Mike marched down the street, he passed two men who were talking on the corner, so he promptly joined in the conversation.

"Are you gentlemen arguin' about Ottoland?" he asked.

"No," replied one of the men, "we're not. We're just discussing personal affairs."

Apparently satisfied, Mike walked on. But he hadn't gone more than five yards when an idea struck him. He turned around again and came back to the two men.

"Pahk?" he cried, "maybe you think Ottoland isn't worth arguin' about!"

TOFIELD'S ANNUAL SPORTS DAY JULY 1

July 1st, Dominion Day, Tofield's Annual Sport's Day falls on a Saturday this year. At Tofield there will be the usual Dominion Day celebration with the old entertaining standbys and a few new ones added for good measure.

At a fairly well attended meeting held at the Town Hall on Friday night last, plans were laid for a Sport's Day, equaling in interest and entertainment any that have preceded it.

The following officers and committees were appointed.

President, W. Worton; Secretary-Treasurer, J. W. Chapman.

Baseball Committee—J. Sorin, Glen Wood.

Softball Committee—W Bulley with power to add.

Tennis—F. Dunn and W. B. Worton.

Hot Dog Stand—W. Bellamy, J. E. Stinson.

Mid-Way—Stan. Lee & Norman Berg. Mr. McCarthy.

Horse Race—J. Morton, T. McBrayne.

Ensemble—T. Wallington.

Dance—A. E. Allan, Geo Brace.

As usual in a meeting of this kind much informal discussion took place with the ultimate idea of making it better still. It had been suggested that the committee engage a piper head or a distraction. The committee was informed that a band of nine could be engaged at $2.00 pay day plus travelling expenses. The idea met with general approval, and a letter has been sent to the band in question for further details.

It was also brought up in discussion that the bleachers used in Edmonton on the occasion of the Royal Visit were for sale cheap and it was suggested that the committee purchase some for use of patrons on July 1st. A suggestion was made that the Baseball Club, Sports Day

DOUBLE HEADER FOR NEXT TUESDAY

For Tuesday next Sharp's Flours has provided picture entertainment of unusual interest. Two main features will grouple the screen bill-of-fare best first class in their respective fields but each entirely different in scope.

"Swiss Miss", a hilarious musical extravaganza starring Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy, will chase the blues away from the most despondent person. Check full of comedy, packed full of scintillating music, reveling with rollicking mirth, this feminist picture of the year is a genuine knee chaser.

For those who like mystery and drama, the Newspaper Reporter detective story "While New York Sleeps", will provide thrills aplenty. Life in the great metropolis, when midnight falls is depicted realistically. Here is suspense, action, drama to the nth degree.

Both features on the same program. Usual admission. Show starts at nine o'clock sharp.

KETCHAMOOT PICNIC JULY 5

The annual Ketchamoot Picnic will be held on Wednesday, July 5th. Baseball, softball, races, etc.

Committee and Town Council committee and purchase some. A resolution was passed that the committee consider purchasing some. It was mentioned that there was a local lumber yard. The chairman promised to get accurate information regarding the sale of the Edmonton stock. "As was done and it was found that the bleachers were being sold at about 60 per cent of new lumber cost, plus haulage from Edmonton. If the matter boiled down to the baseball club being unable to finance, the town council willing to enter upon a 50-50 deal and the sport's day committee or at least some members of it bearing a sigh of relief.

The question of booth concession was discussed at some length, some feeling that $10.00 was to high a fee to charge, the local churches. Others felt it was reasonable. On motion it was cut to $6.00 the last several years will be repeated this summer from July 6th to 11th.

This is a short course of one week specially intended for the benefit of farm mothers. The Schools of Agriculture realize that many farm women have little opportunity for a holiday from their exacting home duties, and it was with this in mind that the first Farm Women's Week was put on in 1920. The course has grown in popularity and large numbers now attend each year. The Staff of Agriculture reports many inquiries coming in, and a good class is expected next month.

FOURTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS

Barry Haverille leaves his Texas home to see the country, meets a man who has just been shot who turns out to be a cousin of his, Jesse Conroy. Barry helps take care of his wounds and Jesse gives Barry his gun, a very unusual one. When they part Barry leaves for home but finds the ranch is no longer there. When he is hearing he suddenly comes across a dead man who turns out to be his brother Robert. Barry starts searching for the murderer, and comes to a mountain cabin, and in one he finds a bottle with the label of good spot, gets gold and goes to Tx. terrible to get money for it. There he meets Judge Bice and his daughter Nancy, who help him to get $450 for his gold. Judge Bice also tells him that the gun Jesse gave him is the gun of a murderer known as the Laredo Kid. The judge carries Barry up to visit him and there Barry discovers the horse and saddle which was stolen from his brother Robert when he was killed. He finds out that it belongs to a cowboy who will return that night. He waits outside the stable and finally a rider comes up to the barns and to be Jesse Conroy.

Jesse Conroy whirled, as swift as a cat, and crouched and whipped out the gun ruling loosely in his holster.

"Oh, it's you, Henderson!" said Jesse. His hand was lowered. There was an irritable edge to his voice. "Yah made me jump pretty near out'n my boots, Cousin Barry. I'd want to look out, sure'n folks like that, less'n one starts shootin' before he thinks."

"Why should you start shooting, Cousin Jesse?" asked Barry.

Jesse laughed and at last slipped his gun back into its place.

"Want to sell that black horse you left here last night, Cousin Jesse?"

"What's come over yuh? I thought yuh didn't go in for horse yuhself; nuthin' them long legs better.

"That's a real nice horse." said Barry.

"What's on your mind, Cousin Barry?" said Jesse, and again his voice was edged.

"That saddle, too," said Barry. "I was looking at it this evening. The fancy Mexico one. Where'd you happen to get that saddle, Cousin Jesse?"

Jesse answered in an off-hand way. "That saddle? It's one I picked up down to Laredo one time. Why?"

"Why?" asked Barry. "I've been down to Laredo since I saw you? It's quite a ways from here."

Jesse's answer hung fire scarcely a noticeable instant. "It's one o' my ol' saddles! L've had it two-three year."

"You lie, Cousin Jesse," said Barry steadily, and pulled his six-gun out of its holster. "That was Tex Hamphreys' saddle; so was that black Tex's; and you killed my brother Robert to get them both. Killed him like a dog just for a horse and saddle. Now, if you think you've got any more killing to do—"

A man standing close behind Barry brought a Colt revolver down brutally on Barry's head, and the boy slumped down.

A commanding voice said pocket your gun Laredo! And get out that damned light. Quick about it!"

"I'm damned!" muttered Jesse Conroy. Slowly he obeyed both orders. Then through the sudden dark his voice came quietly: "What's the game this time, Judge?"

"So you killed young Haverille's brother, did you? Just for a horse and saddle?"

"Yuh're a fine one to talk," sneered Jesse "Well, I'm not sayin' whether I killed young Haverille brother or not, but I'd shore shot young Haverd daid if yuh hadn't knocked him out the minute you did."

"Yes," said the Judge. "So. You hear me, Laredo? I've got plans of my own for him."

"Yes?" said Jesse, and sounded frankly suspicious. "What to make me laugh? Judge Bice wuzzin' time ever this kid? What in hell's he got that I overlooked?" He ended peevishly. "He ain't a prince in disguise or something, is he?"

"Some day, Laredo," said the Judge more quietly, yet in just as deadly and cold a voice, "we'll maybe cut loose and kill each other. Now if you'll keep your shirt on I'll tell you about this young Haverd. He blew into town today with a fist full of gold with the dirt still sticking to it. And it's my pressing affair to find out where he got it."

Jesse whistled softly. "Ah! I might have killed him before yuh found out!" Then, eager and alert, he added, "But Judge, he'll be lookin' up his folks, across yore new ranch; as he'll be folks' the crowd all be knowin'—"

"He won't be seeing anybody but me for a while," said the Judge. I'm keeping him shut away. In the morning, if he's feeling like traveling, I'll put him "You'll go! Oh, Barry, I'm afraid—Promise me!"

"Yes," said Barry, and slipped from the bed, groping for his hat and the new carbine. "I'll stay on and go now."

She clutched him, and whispered Barry."

"Then come with me—"

She seemed for a moment, with hands and arms locked as tightly together, to be of a mind to go with him. But, No," she said. I'll be all right. Anyhow, for a while. Be till the Laredo Kid comes back and—Oh Barry! He wants you!"

Barry said, "I won't go without you."

"You must! You must, Barry! And quick!"

"Then I'll come back—"

"Listen, I sometimes ride back on Jessie's pinto. Now I'll ride on the horse Laredo left. Barry, I'll come back!"

"Then I'll come back—"

There's a trail up to Lookout; it's a pleasure behind the house with the Negro's cabin behind it. Meet me there, Barry—at sunset—"

"Sunset—"

"No. Not so soon. They may be watching for you. In three days—"

The evening appointed for the meeting was the third after that. Barry rode aside above the Judge's fine house and there in a lonely shelter from which he could see the house sitting trail.

Many of some and there was no sign of Lucy. He waited an hour, then another; higher up into the mountains. He came down. There was no time; on his third coming he saw Lucy's white dress on the veranda of the Edmonton-St. Albert road. Owing to favorable moisture conditions, it is anticipated that the said road building will prove successful. In dry weather it has been a boshy shallow route which is costly to maintain.

Lowering of the age groups for male workers so as to include those of 19 under provisions of the adult minimum wage regulations was ordered by the Alberta Board of Industrial Relations during the week. THE WEEK IN EDMONTON

EDMONTON, April 19:- Alberta's oil minister in London was successful in presenting authentic information regarding the oil industry to Admiralty and Royal Air Force officials, according to Hon. N. E. Tanner, who headed the mission. While the Alberta minister were Dr. G. S. Hume, of the Dominion Geological Survey, W. P. Kondo, chairman of the Alberta gas and oil conservation board, and W. S. Campbell, former head of the Alberta Petroleum Producers' association.

British officials were agreed that Alberta's present and future production would justify the building of a pipe line, the minister stated further. There would be sufficient crude oil under production in the province by the time the line was built even if the construction were to start immediately."

Feeling among the officials interviewed was that the line should run to the head of the lakes, rather than to the Pacific coast. This would provide an outlet where the greater part of Canada might be served while making a contribution to Empire interests. "We were well received in London," he said. "Considerable interest was shown in oil development carried out in Alberta."

Another Alberta product came into its own during the week when it was decided to use Alberta salt from Lake Brine, Alberta, on the highway the Edmonton-St. Albert road. Owing to favorable moisture conditions, it is anticipated that the said road building will prove successful. In dry weather it has been a boshy shallow route which is costly to maintain.

STRESSES THE IMPORTANCE OF LIFE INSURANCE

Characterizing the business of life insurance as "of enormous importance to our people", Hon. Gordon D. Conant, K.C., Attorney-General for Ontario, stated that he is opposed to any more government interference with life insurance or any other business than is absolutely necessary to protect the weak and the individual who, standing alone, cannot protect himself.

Speaking at the annual dinner of the Canadian Life Insurance Officers' Association at Toronto, Mr. Conant pointed out that life insurance presents to governments the responsibility of seeing that so far as governments can favorably or adversely affect them, the securities in which their funds are invested shall be unimpaired. Referring to the fact that the province of Ontario has not increased the rate of taxation on life insurance premiums, as has been done in other provinces, he stated that the province has recognized that a tax on life insurance premiums is a tax on thrift, and that thrift is "the last thing that should be taxed or the thing that should be taxed least."

"How vital life insurance is to the public of this country," Mr. Conant continued "is further defined by the fact that business in force in Ontario-Canada and United States—three billion dollars. This amount represents some 2,000,000 policies with the averages policyholder carrying less than $2,000 insurance. These very figures, however, impose tremendous responsibilities upon the insurance companies, and perhaps to a lesser degree, on the departments of insurance and governments. These monies are the funds of insurance companies and a trust representing to many people their very life blood and to their dependents the necessities of life and the difference between want and comparative competency. Your government is keenly conscious that life insurance business shall prosper and will continue to serve increasingly and even more effectively the needs of our people for security and provision in the years to come for the mourned and his dependents.

Getting Back to Earth

"We had a wonderful trip!" enthused the motorist. "We saw snow-crowned summits leaping toward the cerulean heavens; foaming torrents raging through the bottom of shadowy canyons; we looked down from benching crags into the depths of limpid lakes; traversed cyclum glades alive with flashes of golden sunlight; we—"

"How many miles to the gallon did you get?"—Tit-Bits.

Of Course Not

His was a painter in water colors and was very proud of her work; also her complexion was the remark of her acquaintances.

At a dinner party one night she sat next to a shy, awkward young man, who sought valiantly to find something to say.

She tried to open the conversation with him. With becoming modesty she said: "I expect you have heard that I paint?"

"Yes", he replied, gallantly looking at her face. "But I don't believe it."—Tit-Bits.

At the close of the year 1949 there were 1,500 men and 1,000 women began operations under the provincial-municipal farm relief scheme. Under terms of the agreement, for every $5 earned the worker receives $3 in cash and $2 credit on tax arrears. Up to Monday last 600 men on highway construction, with 273 horses and 141 trucks.

Barry Lang, if anybody finds this it will be you, because no one ever comes along here but me writing this the very next day after you left. I don't know why I'm writing this only I don't know why and I don't even know if you can read writing at all right? And, Barry, I'm sick and I had gone with you? I'm sick and I have no one—to help me. I'm going to say good-by for a while to Barry, I'll get it half written a day and I hope you find it.—Good-by Barry.

Lucy.

"Tomorrow," meditated Barry, making his sixth silent way through a bit of forestland where he crossed a high ridged valley toward his new hideout. "I'll go see my folks. I've got to let them know. Before."

As he passed through a small open glade a quail rang out and a bullet shot the air, close to his head, and with it came an ominous shout:

"Hold it, or I'll burn you down! You, Laredo! You've got the wrong man!"

There was a silence out of which finally a puzzled voice, sounding distrustful, muttered:

"Not Laredo, huh? Who says so? You'd say so if you was Laredo."

"Don't be a fool," grunted Barry. "If you know Laredo, you know his voice don't you?"

Reluctantly the voice admitted:

"You don't sound like him, that's a fact." But yuh looked sort of like he done— And what yuh prowling around like this for if yuh ain't Laredo?"

"You make me sick," snorted Barry. "You came nigher once knocking me over, you jackass."

A Four Poster Bed-

You know, one of those massive things that had curtains round it and "valances" from the bed to the floor. Grandmother and grandfather believed they were the last word in nocturnal comfort, and in their day and age, grandmother and grandfather were quite right.

Now, we don't expect you would have one of these for sale. If you possessed one you would likely want to keep it. But among your possessions you probably have something that to you or your family has outlived its usefulness, even though quite good.

A piece of farm machinery, plow, disc, mower, rake, binder or even a tractor that could be turned into money, if the right person knew you had it for sale.

And household effects—there is always someone on the look-out for a bargain. A young couple that needs that extra table, stove, chairs or any one of the many articles of furniture found in the average home.

A Mercury Classified Ad will bring the right parties together as quickly and more cheaply than any other medium in this district. The rates are low. The average of success high.

LAST DAY OF SCHOOL—

The following article by M.S. in the Christian Science Monitor is one of a number by the same author. The articles invariably deal with early pioneer life of the American west growing into the life of a girl's view poem, delightfully written, the theme from the United States, probably experienced some of the incidents described. To school life in the Canadian West in pioneer days, being similar, the articles are of much interest. We al of the articles, and would like to express our appreciation to the writer and the Christian Science Monitor.—Ed. T.M.

When it was three weeks away we could begin to count the days, although even then it seemed unlikely that time would ever come to an end. No other days pass so slowly as counted days.

It was not that we disliked school; not, at least during most of the term; but when the wind blue soft from the south, grass was springing up green and the dust in the road was warm, something told us that spelling and geography and arithmetic, and even passing notes under the desks, were absurd waste of time.

We knew that the happy day was coming, however laggard it might seem, because we were Practicing those most of the term; but when the wind Recitations, and selected Pieces out of a book entitled "One Thousand and One Choice Recitations." In the front of the book were pages devoted to photographs of a beautiful girl, slightly on the plump side, clothed in classic robes with her hair flowing free, depicting the Emotions. Her graceful gestures made the whole thing look easy, but it took very little natural humor to convince most of us that we would do well to select subjects that were sparing-of the Emotions. Each pupil was at least in one Tableague, while those who had good memories and could be depended upon not to get the lines mixed were in several.

Then one morning after potatoes had been planted but before the corn was in, we dressed in our best and sauntered leisurely schoolward, not caring if we were late because there would be no classes that day. We gathered in little knots, joking comparing notes, and realizing as if it had never happened before that for a longer time than we could handily compute we would see each other infrequently. We had one last rehearsal, received final instructions which we were sure to muff in the stress of the actual performance, cleared our desks and gathered together books, pencils and slates that for all our months of association with them were already Dog-eared and Going to Wrack and Ruin.

By that time our parents were arriving. In buggies and lumber wagons, and interesting covered baskets were being carried into the schoolhouse. The men laid planks along the tops of the desks, and then men and children discreetly retired outdoors, the men to pitch horseshoes and discuss crops, the children for one last round of games—Pull Away, King's Base and Going to New York.

After what seemed a very long time we were called inside, and what a sight there met our eyes! The planks were covered with white cloths and spread with silver, each piece marked with colored string so the owner could identify her own later; and all down the centre were bowls of salad, platters of fried chicken, dishes of pickles and relish, piles of baked ham flanked by deviled eggs and candied sweet potatoes, cakes resplendent with rainbow colored icing and sprinkled with candies, and more varieties of pies than would seem possible in a bare prairie country like ours.

We filled our plates generously at the first passing, and only too late realized the importance of discrimination, when perhaps the cake that we had set our eyes upon from the first found us, upon its arrival, quite unable to cope with it. There was much laughter and praise, and a great amount of exchanging of recipes among our mothers.

After dinner we all filed outdoors, where someone was sure to have a camera, and the crowd was photographed; the women carefully donning their hats in order that their compliance with Fashion might be recorded. Those of us that have such photographs tucked away in old trunks are a little more startled and incredulous each time we come upon them. This is, I suppose because we remember the truth of our old neighbors, their kindliness, courage and loyalty, and forget such externals as hats.

The tables were cleared away, the silverware sorted, and the baskets returned to the vehicles. Parents were seated, curtains adjusted, and we got on with the program; but play and food had dulled the fine edge of our acting so that it was a wonder if our lines did not desert us entirely. Still beyond the final applause Spring waited hand in hand with Liberty, and that vision lent wings to our performance.

The littlest ones were prompted in loud whispers; the audience was charmed, at least one person and sometimes a whole family seeing in each performer the seeds of greatness; and so the Last Day went out in trailing glory for all concerned.

In Chicago, 18,000 children vote for Spinach in school lunchrooms. In the end the irreverence of the young will kill these questionnaires.

M. D. OF BEAVER LAKE NO. 625

A regular meeting of Council of the M. D. of Beaver Lake No. 625 was held in the Municipal Office, Ryley on Saturday, June 10 at which all members were present.

Mr. Allen of the Department of Agriculture discussed the grasshopper situation and reported hoppers will very likely cause some damage to crops in this M. D. during the present season, in certain areas. Methods of control and the use of poisoned bait were fully explained by Mr. Allen who appeared quite able and willing to answer all questions put to him by Council. Arrangements were being made for a sub-station at Ryley for distribution of bait and Council requested that it be given due notice of same so that a ready supply of water may be handy.

Hemming, Tisdowsan & Paton appeared before Council as a delegation on behalf of persons interested in the establishment of a Municipal Hospital District in this locality and submitted a sketch showing the boundaries of the proposed district. Council appeared to be divided on the question and after considerable discussion, it was decided to leave the matter to the ratepayers.

A petition for the regrading of the road leading to Bardo was read and considered at some length and it was pointed out that when fixing the present municipal rate of 9 mills provision was made for road maintainance only and that the building of grades other than reasonable repair work and maintainance was out of the question at the present mill rate.

A communication from the Department outlining the regular annual road work plan was considered. In the event of the probability of restrictions arising as between ratepayers not entitled to work under the plan, having to receive labourers or whose tax arrears are subject to a consolidation in the good standing and those entitled to work, it was this M. D. could not take advantage of the Continuation of Elderly Allowance to Mrs. Julia Logan at $15.80 monthly was recommended for payment. The Secretary was instructed to acquire of the Department of Old Age Pensions the reasons for the refusal of pension to Mr. Pawlo Magus and the refusal of pension for Mr. Joe Wisplinski from the amount recommended by Council to $21.25 monthly. The Secretary was also asked reasons for cutting the pension of Mrs. Logan's brother to $8.85.

Mr. Ross of the Lamont Public Hospital appeared before Council and requested settlement of an account amounting to $1440.00 claimed against M.D. for hospitalization of indigent residents. The items in question were fully discussed and settlement in full was made at a amount of $480.00.

Relief for Mr. Paul Yarmolay was refused. An increase of $5.00 monthly was recommended for Mrs. K. Case of Mundare and it was pointed out that the Village of Mundare is responsible for the maintenance of Mrs. Case's relief. Relief was approved for Mr. H. E. Carey of Camrose in the sum of $185.90 for the period Jan. 6th to April 17th, 1950 and notice was given to the Town of Camrose and the Bureau of Relief that in view of the circumstances of this case, no further relief would be approved.

The question of responsibility for hospitalization of certain persons claimed to be residents of this municipality was referred to Mr. J. E. Brownlee, K.C.

Steps will be taken to keep trucks off roads following rains.

"THE ORPHAN FUAL"

(Experimental Farm News)

A fuel raised by hand seldom shows the thrift and development that results from natural conditions, but if strong and vigorous at the beginning it should be well worth while to give it hand feeding, states E. Van Mims, Assistant (Live Stock) at the Dominion Experimental Station, Smoky Lake. It sometimes happens that a sugar there is at hand with a foal of mare, if a good milker, may be induced to raise both foals. Failing this, the mare's milk comes with milk a satisfactory feed for a start. The foal should be fed every hour during the first twenty-four hours and will consume about one pint of milk at each feeding. The milk should always be given warm from the pail. At first a bottle and nipple may be required but the foal will soon drink from a pail of milk. It is important to wash and scald bottle, nipple and pail between each feeding. As the foal becomes accustomed to the change, larger feeds at greater intervals may be substituted for the changes are not too sudden. In a month or six weeks the sugar may be omitted. If the foal has plenty of fresh grass available the breath will probably remain normal but if the grass is not provided an occasional tablespoon full of castor oil may be added to the milk as necessary. Comfortable and exercise are essential for health and in the last of summer shade is valuable with pale and fresh water provided. Access to oats and bran will result in early eating of grain, so that when weaning from milk at about six months the grass is ready for use practically as per ork. At this age if skim milk is plentiful it may be continued indefinitely, fresh from the cream separator.

AND NOW THE EXHIBITION

Manager Percy W. Abbot of the Edmonton Exhibition can now turn his entire attention to completing arrangements for the Edmonton Exhibition after a strenuous look as chairman of the Edmonton Royal Visit Committee. It is his intention to repeat the Royal Visit motif in Exhibition grounds decorations, and his hope that as many folk will flock to Edmonton for the week of July 17 to 22, as came for the Royal Visit.

Thousands of pennants which elicited comment from Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth, will be used in decorating the city and Exhibition grounds for the 1939 annual summer fair, to be held July 17th to 22nd, and many of the large cutouts which were so effective, will be used in connection with the exhibition.

Improvements which have been noticeable around the exhibition ground are being continued, and extended; concrete and iron electric light standards are being set in place to light the sidewalks around the west and south sections of the Exhibition and grounds. The entire grounds have been drained, graded and filled with gravel or cinders. As last year, the railway companies and bus lines are offering single-fare return for Edmonton Exhibition, July 17 to 22.

REPETITION

Regarding the published report of M.D. of Cornhill May meeting. It was stated that Council had not issued R.E. 4-52-20 to Mr. Albert Ray that day, which was correct. However, Mr. Ray had leased the quarter in question for one or more previous years. Normally leases on land are renewable by Council each year, but so as not to jeopardize the Council's chances of selling the land. At the May meeting it was decided not to issue quarters promiscuously as the returns from them were often small, and their use as pasture by the surrounding ratepayers was of more value to the municipality than the small amount received. It was, however, left to the Councillor concerned, after investigation, to make what decisions he deemed proper. As regards the particular quarter leased by Mr. Hay, this was originally leased in return for Mr. Ray having a road through his own quarter, the Council selling under the impression that the cost of constructing a road to take the place of the road through Mr. Ray's farm would be greater than the amount likely to be obtained by the sale of the quarter. Mr. Ray's farm would be greater than the amount likely to be obtained by the sale of the quarter leased by Mr. Hay However, as previously stated, it was left to Councillor Kerttzman to make what arrangements he deemed proper. Mr. Hay informs us that Councillor Kertzman approved of the lease being continued. This explanation is made at the request of Mr. Hay as a number of people understood from the statement that Council did not lease Mr. Hay a quarter section that day" as meaning that Mr. Hay has not a lease to the quarter, an erroneous understanding.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

by R. G. L. Strange, Director "The Crop Testing Plan."

Many farmers in order to improve their crops, have wisely sown some Registered and Certified seed. To obtain the best results a field seeded with this high class material should have an alleyway of three feet or more wide, kept clear ironed it, so that there is no chance of good material becoming mixed with adjoining lower quality crops.

Gophers, field mice and birds, all carry seeds of other varieties into crop the best fields; therefore as soon as the plants have headed out, the farmer should walk through his seed field, and should pull out, by the roots, any plants that obviously do not belong there. This is an operation that pays handsomely.

Some may desire to have their fields inspected next fall so that they can sell the seed in cartons, or sealed bags as Registered or Certified.

If this is the intention then farmers with Registered seed must communicate before July 1st with Mr. W. T. G. Stevens, Secretary of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, at Ottawa, and those with Certified seed should write to the District Supervisor of Production Services-Dominion Seed Products, at Winnipeg, at Saskatoon, or Calgary, for each of their respective provinces. These gentlemen will then inform the farmer about the next steps to be taken.

LINDBROOK

Its a new experience for many to see so much rain as we are having lately, especially those from the dry belt. Various comments upon it are heard, some of them not very complimentary, especially trunk drivers whose business takes them over hills and dirt roads to collect stock, etc; and people who have screened windows; still taking it all in all there's not much to fret about except the inconvenience and the grey hairs caused by same, especially if a truck driver.

In a frenzy thing in this district, how our Scandinavian friends will persist in usurping the Irishman's prerogatives, they now picks on the 17th of Odd Otteland for his birthday, now one is passing around is followed by a pig (whereeeeee is gone); by the way none of them seem averse to the Irish "crayshun" either.

A spectacular blaze took place on the highway west of Lindbrook near where the road turns off to Round Beach (Washke's beach) On Sunday morning early or else late Saturday night, a 5 ton gasoline truck caught fire, origin unknown but thought to have been caused by a short circuit, anyway it blazed and the driver headed into the ditch, and let out what gas he could, getting burnt a bit in doing so. A passing motorist picked him up and took him up to Tofield where he had his burns dressed. The heat from the fire was so intense that the glass all melted and ran over the metal work, everything but the metal was burnt, and the bank of clay on the side of the road was burnt like brick. After the fire it was discovered that one tank still had 200 gallons left in it, so Mr. Alec Donald took the job as contractor over same. The outfit was owned by Mr. Hopkins of Holden.

Lindbrook is a busy burg these days, two work crews in wit, one bridge gang and an extra gang being stationed on the siding, about 50 or 60 men all told. It is too bad it is wet for these fellows have derived a portion for their revenue which is unique and helpful. This is to ensure members with pieces of twine, and the more affluent pot at them with 0.22 rifles, some are pretty good shots with a rock too. We hear a lot about the fine shooting etc. in the National Parks but that costs money and everyone hasn't heads of that to spare; but here's a way of indulging in it in a smaller way and doing the countryside a favor at the same time, and look at the practice it would give if by any chance we have to take an larger game such as some of the news we've been getting of late seems to imply.

One more week and school is out and from all accounts, when it starts again, Miss Phipps will be away and on a new post, so we take this opportunity to say, Good-bye and Good Luck.

Mrs. Howard Stine is still in the hospital, her condition about the same.

ROSS CREEK

Mr. Alex Ford passed away early Monday Morning after a long illness.

On June 20th Ross Creek jun. and Lakeshore are battle for their first game of the season at the Ross Creek diamond. Following the ball game baseball and other forms of entertainment will be wound up by a horse and wolver result.

Rev. Jothen of Cowan, Sask., the first minister that served the congregation was there and held service in the forenoon. Dinner was served in the basement and a programme was held outdoors. Speakers were A. J. H. McCauley of Tofield; Olaf Benson of Edmonton; Mr. J. Cookson of Tofield; and Mrs. P. O. Flaaten. There were solos and duets by Clara Hoag, Lucille Hillerud and the Moen girls.

The oldest old timers present were Mrs. P. Moen of Amisk Creek who is 87 years, and Mrs. S. Flaaten of Barrhead who will soon celebrate her 85th birthday. P. B. Anderson, an old-timer of Barrhead was absent on account of poor health.

On behalf of the Amisk Creek Ladies' Aid and congregation, we extend our heartiest thanks to all those that helped us last Sunday with the programme, food, and help in serving. Special thanks to the Bardo ladies for those who made the effort to come, and who helped us with the programme.

Twin girls were born to Mr. and Mrs. O. Sukhan in the Royal Alexandra hospital at Edmonton last Sunday.—Congratulations.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Brisbane and daughter Greta, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Reed from Armisties arrived home Saturday night by car and took in the old timers gathering during Sunday and visited with friends and relatives over Monday. They commenced the return journey Tuesday morning. Lloyd Reed accompanied them for a short visit.

Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Moen and Myrtle motored to the city Monday morning, Myrtle to take a musical examinies.

Mr. Ralph Olson left for Edmonton where he is to stay with his sister, Mrs. L. Watt until his health improves.

Misses Ruby and Lilly and Arnold Berg from Edmonton motored down and attended the gathering on Sunday. H. Lee accompanied them, all returning the same evening.

The following song was composed by Mr. Andrew Sproats of Ryley and sung by Mr. Kelley last Sunday.

We were delighted
And so excited
When we approached this wonderful land.
That big bald prairie
Looked so contrary,
Here, smiling parklands greeted our hand.
Numerous bluffs gave shelter and shade,
Here were the logs for buildings we made;
Rails for our fences
Can down cayuses,
Fuel was near at hand.
At first the rabbits,
Though 'gainst our habits,
Sustained our lives when we were in need.
Our herds of cattle
Won the great battle,
Gave us new hope that we would succeed.
When the wet years came to our domain,
And it would rain and rain and rain.
Then, weakest money
Made life more sunny;
God was our help indeed.
We were undaunted,
Though often taunted
By the grave fear defeated we'd be.
Roads we constructed,
Schools we conducted,
Churches we built—to God we would flee.
Forty-five years of progress to date!
Marvel we must that our lucky fate

Showed us Alberta,
Central Alberta
And opportunity.

DOMINION DAY CELEBRATION GOES OVER BIG

Fine Weather—Numerous Sporting Events

Record Crowd In Attendance

The annual Dominion Day celebration at Tofield can go down into history as a real success. Despite threatening skies on Friday evening, Saturday broke bright and clear and with the exception of heavy clouds coming up in the west in the afternoon accompanied by a cool wind, the weather was all that could be desired. The threatened storm passed off to the south, no rain falling here.

The attendance exceeded expectations. Paid admissions totalled 796, this only including persons over 12 years. All under 12 years were admitted free. The public crowd was estimated at about 1800.

The bleacher seats, a new improvement to the grounds this year, were well filled for the first baseball game and doubtless enjoyed the entire afternoon. This improvement was made possible by the joint action of the Tofield Council and the Tofield Sports Day Committee, each of whom will pay half the cost of the bleachers.

Baseball—Softball

The first baseball game was played between Rose Creek and Ryley, the Ryley team winning the encounter. It was an interesting game to watch though there why have more the Rose Creek team in action before this season were of the opinion they were not at top form. Swarts and Strand were the battery for Rose Creek and Fuller and McClelland were the battery for Ryley.

The second game of the day turned out to be a fairly easy win for the Tofield team. Opposed by Dodds, the teams were on even terms until the fourth or fifth inning when Tofield ran in four runs. From that point on Tofield had complete command of the game. Dodds tried desperately to recover but were unable to run in the fifth and sixth innings blanketed them. The score was 9-2 for Tofield. The battery for Tofield, Woods and Schultz; battery for Dodds, Ferguson and

The final game was a good exhibition of baseball, Ryley and Tofield by virtue of their previous wins, deployed a thrilling game which found Ryley with the long end. Ryley went to the lead early in the game by scoring two runs and kept it about time it looked as if Tofield were still in the second money. However, Tofield scored two to even up the score. The outstanding play of the game was the sensational home run by Tyler Henseland. Henseland straightened out a bit that went far beyond the centre outfielder, much to the delight of the crowds' The game ended 6-5 for Tofield. Battery for Ryley were McClelland and Underbury for Tofield, Swinton and Schultz. This gave Tofield first money and Ryley second.

Softball

In the first game Thiele, who were substituting for Holden went down to defeat before the Tofield girls.

In the second game Burde lost out to Kingman.

The third game which was played on the baseball diamond before a large crowd was a thriller Tofield and Kingman battled it out, run for run, the final score being as close as it could be without being a tie, 10-11 for Kingman.

Horse Races

Again this year the horse races created quite a lot of interest. There were two races, free for all and pony race, three heats each. There were actually five heats run as only two heats were required to decide winners in the free for all. The winners in free for all, 1 Wenkler; 2 Machonie; 3 Jones. Pony race, 1 Trost; 2 Pimoth; 3 Appleby.

Midway

Quite a number played the games and dolls, blankets and other prizes were often won much to the delight of the winners. The hot dog stand did a splendid business and the church booth was well patronized also.

Foot Races

As usual the little kids and the big kids had a good time running. There were plenty of entries which only thinned out just a little by the time the married ladies' race was run. There are some speedy runners among the married ladies.

Tennis Tournament

This is the first time a tennis tournament has been conducted in connection with the sports day it was not expected that it would attract a large number of spectators, but it did attract and give an opportunity for quite a number of tennis players to play tournament tennis. The courts were in splendid shape and are a real acquisition to the town. Tennis visitors came from Camrose, Viking, and Holden. There were also several coming from Edmonton but were prevented making the trip by rain. Winners of the different events were: ladies' singles, Mrs. Leslie; ladies' doubles, Mrs. Cogdin, M. Malcolm; mixed doubles, G. McFadzean and M. Malcolm; men's singles, G. McFadzean; men's doubles, G. McFadzean, E. Gascoigne.

Austin.

The Dance

The dance was a complete success. If it had been any more of a success, the walls of the theatre would have bulged. There was a capacity jolly crowd. Being Saturday, it was necessary to close down at midnight.

The Sports Day Committee as a body and the sports committees in particular are to be congratulated on the result of their work. It is too early to give the usual financial statement but this will be given in

A SHORT HISTORY OF THE NORWEGIAN LUTHERAN CHURCH OF AMISK CREEK

In all places where Scandinavian pioneer life begins its bitter struggle, there is a yearning most of all for a House of Worship.

This same yearning was felt by these Old Timers and those who settled in Amisk Creek later on. In the minds and hearts of these people lived the steadfast hope of a Church on the prairie no matter how small, and with this thought the members of the Ladies' Aid, for many years, worked untiringly for the church fund.

In the spring of 1914 their hopes were realized as it was then decided to go ahead with the building of a church the same summer and Pederson Brothers of Round Hill were given the contract.

With what the Ladies' Aid had gathered, the subscriptions from the Congregation and other generous contributions, the building fund totalled $1,075.00.

Mr. Alfred Patterson generously gave a plot of ground on his farm as a site for the Church and Cemetery.

On the completion of the Church in the fall, it was incorporated on December 31st, 1914, under the name of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of Amisk Creek.

The congregation consisted of eight families, later on increasing to nine. At the present time there are six families, one family having left the community and the other two having passed on to their eternal abode.

In the year 1928, through the efforts of the Ladies Aid and of the members of the congregation, a basement was built, and in the fall of 1938 a kitchen, which has been sorely needed during all these years, was added.

The ministers who have faithfully served the Amisk Creek congregation are: Rev. Jothen from 1914 to 1915, whom we are glad to have with us on this festive day; Rev. Kornstaden from 1915 to 1923, Rev. Blomlie from 1923 to 1928, Rev. Bjedle from 1928 to 1934, and from then until 1936 they were without the services of a resident minister. Rev. Hoverstein returned in 1936 and remained until 1938, and at the present time Rev. Wessel of Edmonton is pastor.

During these twenty-five years nineteen children have been baptized and eighteen young people have been confirmed and each has taken away nine members of the congregation.

As we look back over the past twenty-five years we are thankful to God that we have been able to share in His work, even though insignificant as our part may have been. Today we rejoice and give our humble thanks to God for all the blessings He has bestowed upon us and we hope and pray He will continue to bestow His blessings upon us.

We thank the members of the Ladies Aid for their unceasing efforts and feel that they have done the most to keep our little Church free from debt.

We also thank the members of the Young Peoples' Luther League of our church for their loyalty and the assistance that they have so ably rendered to the congregation.

Above all we thank our God for the loyal members who have supported the congregation until He saw fit to call them Home.

May God continue to bless our work in the future as He has done in the past.

SYNOPSIS

Barry Haverill and his Texas home for very sentimental reasons, mean more than has just been told to the reader. When Barry left Harry Haverill was a young cowboy. Robert Barry, a wealthy rancher and friend of Haverill, was trying for the possession of the Haverill ranch to get the water rights. Judge Barry, who was a power in politics, was also trying for his gold. Robert Barry was the son of a wealthy rancher in the Laredo Kid. Barry, who was in love with Nancy Haverill, was keeping company with the Laredo Kid. Barry left to visit Nancy Haverill, who lives in the mountains with her father. The man who fired the shot was the Laredo Kid. Barry escaped however, and as he was crossing the mountains a man who was also trying to escape from the two people in the big living room.

The two sprang apart. Barry, his eyes blazing, cried hotly:

"Get you, Laredo! You—"

He broke short off, and the hand that had slid down to his gun rested there, fingers gripping but making no move to draw the weapon. Into the face of a years' pals can tell by stared at the man facing him and felt, into utter confusion.

He had been so sure of Jesse Conroy—Barry myself. Three years ago, at Tyler—

The girl flushed and indignant broke the brief electrical silence.

"What do you mean by this sort of thing?" she demanded hotly. "What right have you to break into our house like this?"

Barry said, looking not at her at all, but steadily at her companion:

"You are Jesse Conroy."

The other laughed into her face, yet Bill Rick's eyes remained as watchful as a cougar's. Also his unprovoked right hand didn't wander. Barry's was on his gun. It said drawingly:

"I see you called me another name. Laredo Kid, wasn't it? Sopretty when I—you make up your mind are Jesse Conroy," it said. "That's the Laredo Kid." The girl looked from one to another. Barry's hearing what to think. "You are the man—" she began.

Barry nodded. "On the trail, you know. Strange to a stranger. And you're Lucy?"

"I am Lucy Blue, yes," she said coldly.

"Then we need to be friends," said Barry. "Friends for one short day anyhow. I am Barry Haverill. It was three years ago, at Tyler—"

"I—I wouldn't know you," she gasped and her eyes opened wide. "You have changed a—a—rather surprising way."

"I'll bet Zachary Rick would have! I didn't know you either. And my cousin here,—Jesse Conroy you have changed more than we have. I don't think that I have met—"

"Is that why you thought him your cousin?" At last she laughed a little, but even so there remained a strangeness in the room. "Well, I will tell you that you have made a mistake. This is Tom Haverill—"

"Tom Haverill!" echoed Barry. "Why, of course! I never heard of any Tom Haverill—"

"If you should happen to be a Haverill," said the other man smiling, "I suppose you know someone have—" Timberline at the creek—"

"Why, of course!" exclaimed Barry. "My sister! You know her, Tyler—Miss Lucy! You knew her in Tylersville; she has the same name as you, Lucy Haverill she was, then Lucy Conroy."

"Oh!" exclaimed Lucy. "Of course I know her. She's my dearest friend. If you should really prove to be your brother, I'd be so happy!"

A dull, baffled rage seethed within Bill Rick. He knew this was Jesse, the Laredo Kid—only he didn't know! "I'll be going now," he said slowly, and felt defeated. To the man he said, "If you're Cousin Jesse, and you're Tom, and I'm going to kill you."

He headed straight to Red Rock to see his sister and have her go out to Judge Blue's to talk to Lucy. The first man he encountered was old Timberline, just returning back to camp.

Timberline grunted him with disinterest, inspired, Barry supposed by a drink or two. The old man said: "I seen young Ken Marck, Barry—down, an' it's all fixed. He was jes' lookin' around for you. Wants to see you. You see, he's a-missin' man an' always was, but not like me, Minin' country, is what he says he is."

Barry said, "Fine."

He rode on. A few minutes later he saw the many yellow lights of Red Rock down below him, and heard Red Rock roistering. He thought: "I'm going to get sister Mary out of that place. She can keep house for Timber and me—when we get a house."

But Lucy wasn't at the lunch counter, and her assistant didn't know where she was or when she was coming back. Where did she live? Barry ponder'd a year, with the Frisco.

Mrs. Price, acting on her speech when Barry ne'e up, hadn't seen Lucy and wasn't expecting Lucy. wasn't time for her to be coming home.

Barry left word that he'd be back, and rode to the saloon.

Here the response forty men in the place, yet almost instantly Barry found a man he wanted. He, unroll, and reached who it was with his back to him.

"Hello, Judge," he said quietly.

The Judge regarded him a bit most without speaking, taking him in from head to foot. Then, "Do I know you?" he said, reaching to place you."

"I heard you'd remember me. I'm Barry Haverill. Three years ago, over at Tyler.

"I remember that day. I remember Barry Haverill. Changed a lot, haven't you?"

"Not more than most folks around my age do in three years. I was just a kid then I guess.

"The Judge's eyes bored into him. "And you—so—I! It was you—walked out on me that night without a word!"

"There were reasons," said Barry.

The Judge nodded slowly.

"My daughter Lucy," he said presently, "was heart by some ruffian on the trail. If it were true, I'd have to give her a hand, I have you to thank. And if you can ever lend me a hand in return—"

"One was called Serbes," said Barry. "But I didn't come here to talk of this, and I don't want any thanks. But maybe you can tell me where this man is that you're dealing with?"

"Why?" cried the Judge, and sounded kneller, "it's my friend Tom Haverill! By thunder! if you're Barry Haverill, you two ought to be related!"

"We are hunting my kinship," said Tom Haverill. "I think we are cousins, and that this Jesse Conroy, They said he was in Red Rock—the Kid. You'd know, Judge?"

"I'll know! Laredo?" said Judge Blue mildly.

The man at the Judge's side said nothing drawlingly: "Look at his gun, Judge. Like one the Kid used to carry, isn't it?"

"You're a stranger here," he said to Barry. "You Haverill isn't. Many will tell you that. And I'm sure I thought he hasn't been here all his life. Been about you?"

The up-and-up young rancher said quietly:

"He says Lucy Blount is his sister. He says she can tell us."

"Well then," exclaimed the Judge, and sounded hearty once more.

"Let's step over and see Lucy Blount anything she says goes with me. Come ahead, boys—"

Are Those Cat Fish?

TREASURE ISLAND, Calif.—This story evolves around "Elmer" the Codger. Elmer is the village loafer position's only cat. Elmer, having mastered the art of snatching small cats at the water of Gay Head Lake Bay from his rock perch at the north seawall of Treasure Island, has gone a step further. Some days Elmer's "official" duties around the island prevent his going fishing. But Elmer has solved this problem.

From his perch on the north seawall rock, Elmer swims a small minnow, gently picks it up in his mouth and races across the north end of the island to the stable area where he drops his catch in a boxes trough for future reference.

Rubberized Silk Stockings Show A Big Jump In Mileage

AKRON, Ohio— Women's hosiery made in a rubber factory and developed along the same lines as the strongest cords in Akron-made automobile tires are the latest thing to come from rubber research into aviation here.

Twenty-four times as strong as ordinary stockings, the hose are now being placed on the retail market in test cities throughout the United States after successful experiments with wearing many months.

Unique because of the tensile strength which has been added to them, the hose have been strengthened by one of the new methods of processing wool—namely the process of increasing twist and boosting the material-wool to about 24 turns per piece of cord tires. Evan C. Brewster, of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company says. The other method which has been tried by other stockings manufacturers is that of adding stronger stitching in the hose.

Mr. Brewster said that the Good-year hose are made of genuine transparent pure silk, like any other stockings, but that the process by which they are formed is extensive and new. "We have spent a lot of time and expense," he says, "binds the filaments together with a gum-like substance. How still in this state is stiff and unwearable and it is necessary in removing the gummy substance which nature designed as necessary for the strength of silk, then leaving the tiny silk filaments permanently soft and brittle.

Government authorities have felt for a long time that if some way was found to keep the silk strong, greater wear would result.

"Many months ago our company set out to find the answer to the problem. The chemists worked on the problem. Many experiments were tried, new concentrations of latex film, rubber derivatives and other plastic materials were used in the experiments.

"Finally this process was discovered and steps were immediately taken to patent it."

Laboratory men shrewd, Mr. Brewster said, that while losing wore a stocking is in constant motion. The thread of each loop in the hose is sawing away at the thread in the loop of the stitch.

The process used in the manufacture of these new stockings, applies a soft protective invisible film to each thread of silk, permitting the loops to slide smoothly over each other, and minimizing the sawing effect. Tests have proved that repeated washings do not remove this film, and that it also protects from the damaging effect of perspiration.

Wear Youngsters Of Motor Traffic

Fresh emphasis on the need of guarding children from accidents during the present holiday period is given by raising the attention of officials of the Alberta Motor Association.

Now that schools are out, motorists are being urged to keep a careful watch for children at play on the streets or highways. Many an accident will be averted if motorists use a little extra care in driving at points where youngsters are prone to spend there playtime periods.

"Children are apt to be forgetful when at play and satisfyingly run across the road or street when chasing a ball or one another," says an A.M.A. official. "Possibly a motor car will be coming along just at this time, and unless the driver has full control of his car and has his brakes in good condition, a serious accident may result.

Last year there were more than 3,000 motor car accidents in Alberta, and many of these occurred during summer holiday period. This year, by exercising special precautions, the number can be reduced.

Motor officials also point out that there is a duty on the part of parents at the same time to impress upon their children the vital need of using care when at street crossings and not to play in centres that are danger zones due to the traffic volume.

Prairie Pioneer Retires

Hon. Wm. Motherwell of Abernathy, Saskatchewan, member of parliament for Marlin constituency, recently announced that he was retiring from public life. Not only has the retiring parliamentarian distinguished himself in the legislative halls of the Dominion, but he is a pioneer in the farmer co-operative movement in Western Canada and never viewed from his stately adherence to the principles of co-operation.

Under the heading, "Motherwell of the Prairies" The Vancouver Province recently printed the following editorial:

A tremendous amount of water has flowed under the bridges of the country and not a few bridges have been built over the country's waters since the day in 1882 when young William Motherwell, newly-arrived from Ontario, ushered his pioneer bride into his art in the beautiful Qu'Appelle valley and commenced breaking the prairie sod.

Canada was only fifteen years old then; she is past seventy now. The second Riel rebellion had yet to come. The transcontinental railways were still unbuilt. There was no railway traffic or wheat for interest tax in the country. The great West was unorganized and there were few settlers west of the Red River settlement. It was years before the country was established on a wheat economy. It was to be years before that economy collapsed.

Young William Motherwell went west to be a farmer, and farming, farmers and farm problems have been with him day and night ever since. They brought him into farm organizations; they brought him into politics. They grew him assets in two senses. He was still very busy on and, though he announced to a gathering at Abernathy this week that he had decided to retire, no one believes the restless William Motherwell can ever do that. He will be found, we feel sure, a way of spilling a little more than his share.

The story of William Motherwell is the story of the Prairie West. And while the province of the West continues to be problems it is hardly likely to be past William Motherwell judged by these will be forgotten, for in the beginning he was the spearhead of the farmer's movement for better marketing conditions which has run far beyond him. He is part of prairie history.

Debts In Alberta Cut By $10,000,000

CALGARY, July 6.—Debts of Alberta farmers have been pared down by almost $10,000,000 through operations of the federal Farmers' Creditors' Arrangement act since 1935, a report issued by the board of review showed Monday.

Forty-eight cases were on the docket for hearing at the board's sittings here this week. Chief Justice C. R. Mackeel of the Alberta supreme court, Edmonton, is chairman.

Farm debts reviewed by the board in Alberta have been reduced by an average of forty per cent, stated the report of Registrar G. W. Harold Milliken.

Of 3,097 cases reviewed up to June 30, 1939, 532 were eliminated. Original debts reviewed totalled $21,618,837, which were scaled down to a total of $14,678,629.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By H. G. L. Strange, Director "The Crop Testing Plan."

"The agricultural scientist has helped farmers to make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before, and has assisted in many ways to increase farm production, but what does the agricultural scientist now intend to do in helping to distribute or to market these products now held as unsold surpluses?"

This was part of the address of welcome by Mayor Telford, of Vancouver, to the recent convention of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association and of the Canadian Society of Technical Agriculturists.

One part of the answer given His Honor the Mayor was that besides increasing production, the scientist has also increased quality, and that it was this superior quality contained in Canadian grains and in alfalfa, grass, field root and garden vegetable seeds, that was enabling these crops to be sold in foreign countries in spite of larger quantities than could be done had the extra quality not been present.

The scientists admitted, however, that in spite of the extra quality there was still unsold surpluses, and that, therefore, something else is needed too. What this something else is was explained by the agricultural economists, and that important matter I will discuss in a forthcoming article.

THE NEW DEMOCRACY—

WE ALWAYS approach the subject of a new political party with diffidence. Not that we doubt the need of improvement in government technique or the sincerity of reform politicians. But in a relatively free democracy it is so easy to promise and so hard to fulfil those promises that we wonder sometimes how so many people can be continually buoyed up by promises of vastly improved conditions, if only the government was changed. The fact that governments in democratic countries are changed every four or five years, quite often the new government having an entirely different platform than the old, seem to pass by unnoticed. If a change of government was all that was necessary, we should all be in clover by this time for we have had many changes. But somehow or other, despite these changes, the great majority still have to work hard for their living; there are still losses and gains; there is still poverty and distress side by side with luxury and affluence. To what extent, then, can a government, any government, bring about vastly improved conditions. Under certain circumstances, it is only fair to say that a government can, by making the right move at the right time, improve conditions. A case in point perhaps would be the reciprocity agreement between Canada and the United States in 1911. On this occasion Canada voted against the Eastern manufacturers and to the detriment of western agriculturalists. Instances of this kind however are few, the opposition government making any appreciable change in the economy of the nation only occuring once in a long time.

Why then is the body politic frequently offered "policies" and "platforms", promising to bring about beneficial conditions? Simply economically. One reason, and probably not the least, is that the power to govern is attractive. The honor, prestige and distinction of being a M.L.A. or a M.P., together with the financial stipend, makes it easy for those on the outside to believe that they could do so much better than is being done were they only on the inside. We do not believe that all our M.L.A.'s and M.P's have no sense of service to the country, quite the contrary, but we do believe the reward, from whichever angle it is viewed is quite an attraction. Another reason is that humanity does not stand still. There will always arise in time a demand for change. It is hoped and expected of course that the change will prove beneficial, it sometimes does. sometimes it does not. But a stationary body politic is impossible, and even were it possible, it would be highly undesirable. Another reason for repeated promises of a new era through government channels is the persistent belief that the government is all powerful. In some ways of course it is. It can pass laws, and providing they are wise laws, can force people to obey, but a government cannot control the individual spending or saving habits of the people. Neither can a government control outside forces or climatic conditions which tend to raise or lower the prices of primary products. The powers of a government in a democratic country are beset with definite limitations.

Well then, when these new "policies", "platforms", or in what ever form these new ideas are presented to the people are made known, what should be done about them. Turn them down? Certainly not! Accept them holus bolus? Certainly not! The only thing to do is to study them. Study them in the light of common sense. Be progressive without being foolhardy, be conservative without being hidebound. Remember the same simple business principles that govern the farm or the corner grocery, govern the government. The only difference is that the government's resources as regards money and credit are vastly greater and of longer duration.

In appraising new platforms or policies it is necessary to examine them in the light of previous experience. To what extent have previous pre-election promises been fulfilled? Are the promises possible of achievement, and if so are they likely to be a success? At present time many people are watching the result of the New Zealand government program. It will be remembered that New Zealand has enjoyed the reputation for many years of being well governed. A few years ago a labor administration headed by Premier Savage was returned to power. The government passed quite a lot of advanced social legislation and the first four years regime went along splendidly. But it so happened that the election of the labor government co-incided with the upturn of better business conditions in New Zealand. The price of wool, upon which the economy of New Zealand partly depends, rose sharply, which together with other improvements, made the new advanced legislation easy to inaugurate. New Zealand also had a large reserve fund in London, England, and this fund, to "put over" the new legislation was considerably lowered. With-in the past few months Premier Savage and his labor government was returned to power, and in contrast to the first election, the time co-incided with a drop in the price of wool, which together with the lowered reserve in London, has in modern language put the government "on the spot." Already some modifications of the advanced legislation has been made. How much of the advanced social legislation will stand the test of time no one knows, but it should be interesting for Canadians to note the progress in New Zealand for the next few years.

The Week in Edmonton

EDMONTON, July 5:- Edmonton, capital city of Alberta, is looking Forward to the First Hundred Thousand. Not the famed Hundred Thousand of 1914 but possibly of 1940 or 1941, when the population of the city climbs to that number. The year's census shows a new record — 86,419 persons.

Announcement in London that two prominent Britons are on the way to Alberta to investigate the possibilities of a pipe line from the Turner Valley cause heat on the back of another report which said the possibility of a commercial-military enterprise providing a pipe line had been known to Winnipeg financial men for months. It was added that the Dominion cabinet had been in conference with a prominent oil company, and that a "memorandum" was being prepared by a Winnipeg printing firm.

******

Indications are that Alberta Health Week, which is current at the time of writing, is meeting with a good deal of support among business men and public generally. In connection with the educational feature of the campaign, it is worthy of note that the Department of Health distributed free literature on many family topics. Readers of the Mercury who wish to obtain a supply should write to the department at Edmonton.

Young Albertans to the number of 18,000 are expected to enroll in the 1939 youth training projects to be carried out this year. Of these there are the result of a joint agreement between province and Dominion. Cost to each government is estimated at $130,000 — an increase over last year's costs of $10,000 to each government. In addition, the province is expecting to receive from Ottawa about $30,000 for forestry training, and the Dominion will likely match this amount.

******

Last year, the youth training projects were divided into six classes. Class "A" for re-establishment on relief projects, of whom there were on at 35 provincial centres with a total enrolment of 4,450. Class "B" enrolled 60 young foresters. Class "C" trained 120 assistants, of whom 75 were already obtained work. Class "D" provided trade and industrial training for young boys and girls, of whom 533 were placed. Class "E" provided agricultural farm training to 96 young agrarians. Class 'E' enrolled 2,906 young men and women in 30 rural and agricultural courses. These were divided into 89 groups in 38 communities, and it is expected that the number will be increased this year.

******

This year an additional class will be established in "E," at least if Parliament enrollee will obtain training in aeronautics.

Provincial debt was cut by $6,398,000 this week, when the payment of $6,580,000 made by the C. N. and C. P. railways on account of the N. A. R. purchase was received by the Imperial Bank here. This, the bank announced, was hypothecated to the bank by the former administration as security against bank loans to the province.

Protest against the scheduled lowering of anglers in national parks has been made by Mr. George A. Kellie, president of the Northern Alberta Fish and Game League. In a letter to Hon. T. A. Crerar, dominion minister of mines and resources, the League president also requested the establishment of a 3,000,000 fry hatchery at Jasper and rearing ponds of 500,000 thousand fingerling capacity. While ponds and streams are so depleted, he claims that there is no justification for lessening restrictions.

******

It is noteworthy that, for rivers and streams outside the parks the provincial government has the most modern equipment in the Dominion.

******

Employees of the Alberta government who draw wheels or part salaries contributed by the Dominion will not receive treasury vouchers, so do other civil servants up to 25 per cent of their salaries. Purpose of the new move is to protect the government from the Dominion taking exception to any grants being paid out in Alberta credit.

Alberta's Maternal Welfare Act, which provides for cash allowances to needy mothers, is now operative, according to Health Minister Dr. W. W. Cross. It is expected that between $80,000 and $70,000 will be distributed this year under the new measure. Grants are intended primarily to supply necessary food to infants during their first months of life. Applications should be made after birth of child, to the local registrar of vital statistics.

******

Following the radio address by Hon. Dr. D. Hogg, Wednesday night, Social Credit members of the Federal parliament issued a statement in the city Thursday to discuss the former Canadian Minister's program. The social Creditors have been in caucus for several days past, but at the time of writing have not intimated what stand they will take in regard to the New Democracy proposals.

Good progress in the provincial government's labor exchange policy is reported by the Department of Labor. Since the system started only one month, over forty boxes have already been ordered by log raisers and other forest products is expected that by fall the monthly enrollment will reach several hundred.

The movement for live stock improvement is also gaining pace in Alberta, according to reports. For the first six months of the year the distribution of bulls and stallions has been highly encouraging.

Britain Wants More Poultry From Canada

"There has been a notable improvement in the packing and grading of Canadian poultry reaching the British Market in the past two to three years, and the only complaint is that we are not getting enough of it," said Stephen Strunsky, one of the largest buyers of poultry on the Smithfield Market, London, England, who visited Ottawa recently.

"One of the principal reasons for our visit to Canada is to try and find out why we can not get more Canadian poultry," continued Mr. Strunsky. "There is a market for fifty or four times as much as the Dominion has been sending recently, providing it is within the 3 lb. to 5 lb. weights which are most in demand by British consumers. Poultry from Canada at present reaches us in poor condition after a six or seven weeks' journey across the ocean. Grants are intended primarily to supply necessary food to infants during their first months of life. Applications should be made after birth of child, to the local registrar of vital statistics.

LAKESHORE

On June 30, the 1926—2 school year closed with a picnic held at the T. E. Murray. Those who attended report a happy afternoon, the only jarring note being the thought that Miss Hart is being transferred to Tofield. We are glad to have had her for the past year, and our best wishes go with her.

Over the week-end Mrs. Betzel enjoyed visits from Mrs. Bob Bradley and Mr. J. McDonald of High River, and Miss Myrtle Bethel of Sedgewick.

Lorne Hardison left on Wednesday morning for Edmonton. From there he will return to Fort Nelson, B.C.

Miss Hart left on Sunday for Edmonton where she will attend summer school, before going on to Cochrane for the remainder of the holidays.

HOT BOX KING GIVES SERVICES THEIR GRATITUDE

It has been brought to our attention that a number of people are under the impression that Walter Salisbury operates the hot box stand at the annual sports for private profit. This is entirely wrong. For since this committee was organized some eight or nine years ago, Mr. Salisbury has given the work absolutely free for the committee. Book and equipment and has worked and served hot dogs to thousands of hall association. The first of July to him has been a day of service to the committee and Tofield to the general public.

The different committees call for varying degrees of work which is all done as a service to the community. With Mr. Salisbury it is not mentioned. Mr. Chapman who as secretary, does quite a lot o work also. The Association, however, has Packed full of hall association, have a love for the stand, will intrigue you; and giving you meals and singing star will amaze you, "Hiya Brother Rat" is the latest entertainment that ranks high in its class. There are other additional features, news reel, sports reel, comedy reel, all of which goes to make an interesting and entertaining entertainment. Usual admission. Show starts at 8 p.m.

LINDBROOK

The weather having assumed a more pleasant character, the Sunday evenings at the various lake resorts are back in vogue again. Lastly it was the turn of the Lindbrook folk to spent a very pleasant day, some in town and others visiting friends.

Mrs. Ted Gemehl is away on a visit to Sandy Plain.

Mrs. Herbert Gill was taken to hospital or observation re suspected appendicitis. We all hope it was a false alarm and that she is O.K. again now.

A farewell party was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. Robinson in honor of Miss V. Burns, who has been teaching Westside school here but is leaving it this term end. Singing and dancing were the amusements and a dainty lunch was served. The party broke up to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne" and farewells to Miss Burns.

Miss Y. Phipps also left this week for Edmonton where she will attend the summer school there.

A dance was given on Friday night in R. Hanscomsley's barn. The place was packed, still the dancing floor space was kept clear. Mr. John Holley acted as master of ceremonies, the music being supplied by the Mc-Kinley family orchestra, who by the way are the guests of Miss Lily Morden. The L.G.C. provided the lunch which of course sets the stamp of approval on that item. Everyone enjoyed it so much that there's to be another one this week on Wednesday, same time and place. We hope the building fund of the Community Hall benefits, for that is the object of the dance.

The Tofield children of Lindbrook finished the term last Friday by staging a little play at the school before they left for the homes of their oldey friends and parents. They then journeyed to Hastings Lake for a picnic at Mr. Norman Ellis' beach for which due thanks are tendered by the community. Here, rains need sports were the order, Mr. J. Bailey and A. Jensen being in charge of the sports. Luckily it kept fine as all present had a real good time, especially the kiddies. Dodie at one cream, ice cream candies etc., and all that s kid delights in.

LINDBROOK

The second dance in Mr. R. Hanscomsley's barn in aid of the Building Fund for the Community hall was exceptionally well attended, showing how popular these dances are, especially considering the fact that it was on a mid week night, Wednesday to wit. The music was supplied by the local orchestra, the lunch being the business of the L. G. C. and of course was O. K. by the way so was the music as well. The ice cream sale went off big too, and all present had a real good time and we hope the welfare of the Building Fund benefitted greatly by same.

The P. & H. elevator here, R. Holdsen in charge, has had some new improvements added lately, these being a T. P. dump, big enough to accommodate the largest loads, and also a new scale beam. Mr. T. F. Waters of Cooking Lake had the honor of dumping the first load of grain over the new outfit. Now if they'd only install a free beer engine we'd see what an immense volume of trade that would bring, especially these hot days we're having, you can get free air there, and when the gang is in session there lots of hot air as well.

There's one hell in this neighborhood that lives up to the reputation of Perdicand's" gentle heredity. This "gentleman" got hold of a pair of lads and kept him there for an hour or so, cause the said lad had a lot of time to admire the lines and build and color of this said bull until it grew tiresome and he came home.

The home of the Anglicans W.A. of Tofield were entertained to afternoon tea at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Lemmon here last Thursday. Judging from reports it was a very pleasant and profitable affair.

There was another car accident near Mr. Fleming's on the Highway west of Lindbrook, but nothing more details were not given, but children! Whilst there are cars there are bound to be accidents, so why harp on them.

HASTINGS LAKE

Yes, here we are again and it's still summertime, but to bring ourselves up-to-date we will have to jump to "away back when" and take a quick review up to the present. To begin with, we want you to know that contrary to public opinion we did not go out with the ice. No, sir, we are still here and still busy. Now that the busy rating period seems to have ended, or has it? you will find us out in the garden clearing away the weeds to see if the vegetables are coming up yet and we are finding that they aren't doing too badly at all. But it's really surprising what the weeds can do! And it is surprising too, what you can find in the flower-beds, especially with a pup around.

I dog, I rabid, I hoed, I find The beds for all my seeds to grow

Then up they came, the beds were mined,
With cows and chickens, that pup and so on.

How I did dig and rake and sow! But I'm not going to whine, I'm just

The prettiest place for flowers and us.
The chickens chose that place to dust.

We must not go any further with out paying a word for the Hastings Ave. It seems that after they were about a foot under water on the rink the boys decided to have a good time and make use of the season. They met down at the rink and took off the boards, piling them all together in one heap. Then some talk of changing the position of the rink met with approval.

I also remember at least one attempt to put on a dance at the schoolhouse, but due to a busy rain that blew up that evening, it was put off.

The newly formed ladies' club, namely the Women's Club, is now well underway. A strawberry festival was held at the Wahaka beach on June 17. It turned out to be a rainy morning but it cleared up a bit later on and the sun came out. Everybody crowded sky a number gathered and spent a very enjoyable afternoon. Although it was rather on the chilly side the ladies had no trouble in getting rid of their strawberries and ice cream. Their next meeting will be held on July 26, at the home of Mrs. A. C. Hoosner, where plans will be discussed as to the dance and plans to raffle off the afghan and cushion they crocheted this spring. All members are asked to bring in their raffle tickets.

School closed with a bang-up picnic at the lake on June 30. Mr. Rutherford is spending the holidays in Edmonton, but is expected back here when school opens again.

Mr. R. H. Anderson is home for the summer from his school near Athabasca.

Speaking of teachers, Mr. N Karchut, who taught the Splitted School this last term has quit that profession to become a salesman for the Maytag Washing Machine company. After having taught school in Winnipeg he will be at work there in Edmonton.

"Little Helpers" Rally

The annual Little Helpers' Rally was held at Holy Trinity Church on Friday, July 7th. It was a bright, happy service and a delight to see so many wee children present with their mothers. It is not an easy matter for a speaker to get down to her children's level, and perhaps drive her own ear a few miles or so, but, still it was done, and it made the hour, feel it was all very worth while and that her large family of boys and girls were still as anxious as ever to hear how God our Father loves and cares for all His children everywhere, and to pray for His family of children in all the world. It was lovely to hear them thanking God for all the people who loved them, especially their mothers who have such a lot to do, and how they can help by being loving and cheerful and doing things without grumbling when they are asked. Their little mite box gifts were brought because they love Him and were glad to be able to send His messengers to people in other lands. The Juniors, most of whom were former Little Helpers, took part in prayer. After the service all went to the home of Mrs. J. W. Robinson. A sudden shower made it necessary to have lunch indoors, but it wasn't long before the sun shone and it was possible to have a jolly time outdoors. Games, ball, and merry-go-round etc. aroused one and all. A few speeches were made, the bell brought the afternoon to a close, and the happy one soon departed for home, each having a bag containing so orange and candy. TOFIELD BRANCH of CANADIAN LEGION TO BUILD CABIN

At different times during the past twenty years there have been mentioned the advisability of erecting, in Tofield, some permanent token of respect for those men from this district, who during the great war, served their King and Country overseas, and especially for those who paid the supreme sacrifice.

At the close of the war a branch of the Canadian Legion was formed here, but with the passing of the years, vanes a lessening of the original enthusiasm, and to-day, only a comparatively few keep their membership alive and in good standing.

The Branch however, has a little money and it is proposed to spend for all the people who loved them, especially their mothers who have such a lot to do, and how they can help by being loving and cheerful and doing things without grumbling when they are asked. Their little mite box gifts were brought because they love Him and were glad to be able to send His messengers to people in other lands. The Juniors, most of whom were former Little Helpers, took part in prayer. After the service all went to the home of Mrs. J. W. Robinson. Cornhill Council Deal With Many Matters

Requested Roads — Relief — Taxation, Etc.

10 PER CENT DISCOUNT ON CURRENT TAXES ENDS JULY 31.

A regular meeting of the Council of Municipal District of Cornhill was held at the Municipal Hall on Friday, July 14th, 1939. There were present, Reeve Walker in the chair, Councillors Anderson, Holmberg, Kertzman and Swabey.

After the reading of the minutes together with a list of accounts passed for payment at the last meeting a motion approving of them as read was formally passed.

"Whereas the road along the east one-half mile between section 36, township 51, range 19, and section 1, township 52 range 21, both west of the 4th meridian is a dangerous and altogether unsatisfactory condition, being too steep and narrow for trips to pass, and

"Whereas the bad condition of the road is a source of annoyance and danger to all who are obliged to use it.

Therefore we the undersigned residents and ratepayers hereby petition the Municipal District of Cornhill No. 487 to grade the said road and put it into proper condition during the present season."

The petition when was dated June 26, contained some twenty-odd names.

Mr. Anderson addressed the Council saying that the road was in a dangerous condition, for a distance of half a mile. At one point it was very narrow and due to a curve, and a hill and bush, it was difficult to see oncoming cars. He felt the road at this point should be straightened out and regraded.

Councillor Holmberg in reply said that the condition of the road surface was not bad. He had driven over it that morning and had experienced no difficulty whatever. It was true it was quite narrow at one place and the hill was steep and bush to some extent obscured the view. But driving carefully would eliminate the danger. The Council were faced with the problem of looking after many miles of road and could only do so much with the resources they had. He hold out no hope for work to be done on that road this season, except perhaps, cutting some brush in the vicinity of the curve.

Mrs. Olson said the road has a bad curve, it is ridiculous to leave it that way Two cars have gone through the fence already. She was one of the oldest taxpayers in the district, but only wanted to see fair play to everybody. She however that the road passing her place had not suffered much work done on it. She had been compelled to have work done on it herself. Any neighbor hill often to have been brought her place as the road was not good. Her corner seems to be neglected.

Councillor Holmberg in reply said Mrs. Olson had a legitimate complaint and would see that work was done. But he reminded those present that the Council was limited as to the amount of road work they could have done.

The Council had adopted a policy of working out from market centres. The Council felt that even those ratepayers who did not live on those roads benefited by their construction, as they would travel over them to reach their market town. He repeated that as regards the road which the petition dealt, he could promise nothing this year, except, perhaps, a clearing away of some brush to make the view of the road better. They were trying to work out a fair program without favors to anyone.

In answer to a question by Mrs. Olson, as to when they expected to work on the road Councillor Holmberg replied he could not say definitely but they always had hopes for the future.

Letter was read from F. C. Carand bush to some extent observed

UNITY OF PURPOSE

Unity of purpose is necessary today. Too many of our citizens are apathetic to the dangers facing Canada and our Empire. The veteran must respond the call of service and by example in either civil or military lines inculcate in the minds of any uninterested citizen a desire to serve—a desire to serve our country in the manner best suited to individual ability. This is a duty unsanctified to us by those who served to the end.—A.B.C

EIGHT INSTALLMENT SYNOPSIS

Barry Haverell leaves his Texas home to see the country, meets a man who has just been shot who turns out to be a cousin of his, Jesse Conroy. While carrying part Barry leaves for home and sees across the wounded body of his brother, Robert Barry starts searching for the murderer and is befriended by Judge Bliss and his daughter, Lucy. Judge Bliss tells Barry that Robert's home is the gun of a cowboy known as the Laredo Kid. Judge invites Barry up to visit him and Lucy Barry meets Jesse. He accuses Jesse of killing his brother and of using the name Bob Neal. Judge Bliss clears up from behind, knocks Barry unconscious. Barry escapes however and meets an old man named Tinsley, who also is searching for the Laredo Kid. Barry finally goes to Red Rock where, going through a valley, he sees three men attempting to capture a beautiful girl. Barry rescues her and finds she is Lucy Bliss. At the house he meets a man called Tom Haverell and finds he is searching for the Laredo Kid. Barry is suspicious. Tom Haverell accuses Barry of being the Laredo Kid. Barry tells the strangers there that his sister Lucy who works at the ranch over the town, can identify him. They search for her but she's missing. Barry, now a friend of Mr. Bliss, Mitch, go looking for her and find her on a ridge with Sarbee and two other men. Tom Haverell, the Judge and other then come, after Ken has been shot, and hang the men in the cabin where they leave Barry stays on.

So it was to the bank that had been mined in place that he returned. He tried to pull up the floor boards. They were down solid.

He regarded the portion of the wall that had been behind the bank; he noted how a short section of log had been slipped in. He began working at that short section. When it came free in his hands he found a hollowed space in the wall; his groping fingers came in contact with a small box of some sort. It was iron or steel, a tight fist thing a man could feel. Joe Hosmer it was, came out making trouble. Shot at me twice; pretty near got me. I had to blaze back at him."

Tom Haverell's answer stopped her. She wasn't sure that he laughed. The two men were walking towards the Judge's study; the bank closed at 3 o'clock.

"Tom, you're getting married tonight, Barry. Lucy sent a man over late, after dark, asking us over. I—I guess they're married by now."

Barry sat staring at her like a man carved out of stone and decorated with black jewels for eyes.

"Tonight? Now? Lucy marrying Laredo? Good God!"

He flung her arms away and jumped up. "When? Where? Tell me all about it!" He shouted. His voice rough with anger.

Lucy started falling, but he did not wait for it all. He learned that the ceremony was set for tonight, as soon as the preacher could be brought to Judge Bliss's house.

Barry never waited longer than now, rushing along dim trails to come to the Judge's home before it was too late.

When from the ridge back of the Judge's place he caught glimpses of many lights winking through the trees, he knew he was right.

He hammered impatiently at the door, found it unlocked and flung it open without waiting. As he stepped in he saw Judge Bliss coming from another room, looking startled.

"Barry Haverell!" exclaimed the Judge. "You—you're alive after all!"

"What's all this I hear about Lucy getting married tonight?" demanded Barry.

"Eh?, isn't to marry that devil, do you mean?"

JAMES A. RICHARDSON

Dreamer — Pioneer — Philanthropist

(Major H. G. L. Strange)

With that deep gripping sorrow which for the moment makes the mind and heart oblivious to all else, Canadian people from the Pacific to the Atlantic learned of the sudden and unexpected death of Mr. James Richardson.

James Richardson was one of a small group of men — sons of whom are fortunately still living and active — who are the rare and particular creation of new countries which like Canada, boom with unbelievable natural resources.

James Richardson inherited wealth and by unremitting hard work, by courage, ability, and particularly by sterling integrity, he greatly increased his fortune, and then he dreamed great dreams of how he could use that wealth to improve the lot of his fellow men and to advance the interests of his country.

James Richardson inherited a large measure of the pioneering spirit of his mission; and his first, best and best loved venture was the creation of one of his heart was the desire to help the prairie wheat growers, by trying to make sure that the cost of getting their grain to the world's markets would be cheap and by endeavouring to win for them the highest prices that under possible prime for their product. He took a keen interest in encouraging and in the early years of his life attempting to develop crops and varieties that would be most productive all-round qualities for the prairie farmers and would make more profit out of their efforts.

James Richardson also had visions of a great merchant fleet that might accrue in a' from the opening up of the Canadian Northland to the world country, and so he financed mines and sponsored Western Canada Airways which, after successfully entering Canadian Airways — which now flies from coast to coast — a passenger service by aeroplane to the north. His Company too was a pioneer in the use of these ships for today directly and indirectly profit from the great stream of wealth flowing from northern mines and forests whenever it is also unquestionably true to state that had it not been for James Richardson's air pioneering we might not yet be enjoying our existing fine airmail and air passenger transcontinental services.

Very dear to his heart, and most private with him, was the splendid care for aerial purposes which he made of the many acres of land he had later increased through his gold and prospecting activities. Little of it did he use for his own benefit and comfort, excepting a fairly himself relentlessly to make his dreams and visions come true, and then driving a hard bargain he and severtained his heart in the full flower of his manhood.

With his keen enthusiasm and his money he supported innumerable schemes which people brought to him, and he required only to be assured that the plans should have the object of creating additional employment for people, as of improving the living conditions of the people about. In has been said that no man with anywhere near his means ever gave away from James Richardson empty handed.

Considering his great vision, his dreams, his adventurous spirit, his generous nature, his wide sympathies, one cannot help but be struck by the similarity between James Richardson and another great man, who also devoted his wealth and energies to the advancement of his race and of his country, namely:—Cecil Rhodes. Rhodes, remember, founded Rhodes' schools. Rhodes' gold, Richardson nickel. Rhodes' feverish and persistent efforts to open up mid-Africa, Richardson for England by telegraph and railroad. Richardson's similar efforts to open up our north for Canada by aeroplane. Rhodes' love of education and his endowments to Universities. Richardson's similar love of education and endowments to Universities. Rhodes' support of worthy enterprises in South Africa. Richardson's support of similar enterprises in Canada. Rhodes' great public manifestation, charities and support of the Church. Richardson's gifts to the same order And so we find a striking parallel between these two great men, each of whom devoted his wealth and his life to the betterment of the country in which he lived.

The farmers of our province, and the people of the whole of Canada, are better off because James Richard. son lived and worked and dreamed and pioneered, and "There will never come an end to the great good which he did."

THE WEEK IN EDMONTON

Following a successful Health Week in which a province-wide movement for healthful living and physical fitness was inaugurated, the Provincial government travelling health clinic moved into the Peace River district.

* * * * * *

For some weeks the clinic, in the charge of Dr. J. W. Bridge, has been carrying out a schedule of visits in the southern and eastern part of its province.

* * * * * *

Complete examinations, dental work and minor surgical operations are being carried out. There are now nine clinics in operation as compared with five in 1938.

* * * * * *

Effective as from July 3, pipeline rates on movement of petroleum from the Turner Valley field to Calgary have been reduced, according to an announcement from Hon. R. C. Mannig, minister of trade and industry. The new rate is 9 1-3 cents per barrel.

* * * * * *

The reduction, amounting to 6 1-2 cents, is the result of recommendations made by the recent McGillivray Royal Commission which investigated the whole Turner Valley oil situation at the request of the Provincial Government.

* * * * * *

Commenting upon the reduction, Mr. Manning declared that "the immediate effect of the reduction, it is saving to the refining companies." The ultimate effect, while saving no taxpayers, must "defray the cost of the public inquiry that has brought about the reduction."

* * * * * *

Indications of the keen interest being shown in government policy were manifested at the first meeting of the speaking tour of Premier Aberhart and Hon E. C. Manning.

* * * * * *

The Premier and Mr. Manning addressed meetings at Viking, Wainwright, Lloydminster and other centres during the first week of the tour.

* * * * * *

Business conditions are on the upgrade in Edmonton and district according to post office trade figures, and tax collections.

* * * * * *

Post office revenue and money order business is well over the five million mark for the last 12 months. This is an all time record.

Possibly the most significant index of Edmonton's business condition is shown by an increase of $66,814 over last year in taxes collected. In addition to prepayment, collection of arrears of taxes show an appreciable increase, even after a 2 mill reduction in the rate of taxation.

* * * * * *

Distribution of grasshopper bait on land likely to be infested was urged in a statement issued yesterday by Hon. D. B. Mullen, Pringle, who said that during wet weather there was a reduction in grasshopper activity. Mr. Mullen reminded farmers that the menace could be checked only by concerted effort.

* * * * * *

Meanwhile, J. R. Boss, Alberta district agriculturist, has reported that the grasshopper situation is well under control for the present.

* * * * * *

During the year, the Alberta government has purchased over 550 carloads of poisoned bait for distribution, fitting centres where the product is prepared for the pests, are maintained at Calgary, Camrose, Drumheller and Lethbridge.

* * * * * *

Knitter to the season, approximately 60 cars of poison bait were spread daily as per Inspector Bell's report. Costs of the bait are shared equally by the Provincial and Municipal governments.

* * * * * *

Calgary's great exhibition and stampede got officially underway on Monday, July 10 with an address by Hon. D. B. Mullen. Mr. Mullen was introduced by J. Charles Yule, president of the exhibition.

* * * * * *

Success and progress were awaiting both the stampede and the province, declared Mr. Mullen, and added that "Alberta is arrayed as a land of plenty."

Communication was read re S. Stirret asking that his time for his tax consolidation payments be extended.

Letter from Department of Municipal Affairs re W. Christenson, Kingman. It appears Mr. Christenson wrote reimbursement for a portion of his land taken for a road diversion. The Dept. requested an investigation be made. Councillors Anderson and Holmberg were appointed to investigate and will report at the next meeting.

Adjournment for lunch.

On motion of Reeve Walker, Councillor Anderson will be allowed $175.00 for work to be done in Hamlet of Kingman.

Mr. Ivan Cowden wrote re road to his place. He stated he had to haul his truck a mile from his farm. He did not even have a trail cut to his place. This was left to Councillor concerned.

Communication from Department of Public Works re arrears of taxes, two for one basis, Cornhill district. Under this scheme ratepayers in arrears of taxes may enter a portion of their arrears. For each $1.00 worth of work done under a competent foreman, the municipality will credit $2.00 to the arrears on account of taxes and the government gives a bonus of 50 cents (1 cripality) $1.00 ea cash. It was agreed to try it on a limited scale, the amount of which is to be decided by government being as follows: Div. 1, $100; div. 2, $200; div. 3, $400; div. 4, $400; div. 5, $100; div. 6, $300. This makes a total of $1500.00, to which is to be added $2000.00 as relief arrears, making in all road work to the value of $3,500.00 to be done under the plan. A motion covering the above arrangement made by councillor Dewhurst and carried.

Mr. Dunham interviewed Council requesting that the services of his road isolation payments be carried over until fall. Council agreed to grant most of it. It was left to the secretary to adjust.

Mr. Andrew Kosack interviewed Council, applying for relief. He had been cut off of the previous meeting but had received temporary relief through the councillor. He still complained of the sickness of his wife and compelling him to stay at home.

It appears that a doctor in Edmonton, self styled or otherwise, had guaranteed to cure Mrs. Kosack for for $20.00 the municipality would pay the $20.00, but proof of cure would have to be made first. So Andrew borrowed, as he said $10 from a friend and paid the doctor this with the promise the balance would be forthcoming if a cure was made. But while Mrs. Kosack's condition was improved while in Edmonton, it reverted back to her invalid state when she returned home. So he appeals to the Council not to pay the other $20.00 should they ever be asked for it. He made a strong plea for continued relief but the council felt that relief to his case had been carried to extraordinary lengths and that there was no justification for not working during the summer months. They suggested he ask for a job and was not relief.

Letter re road diversion south side S.W. 14-52-19-W4. Reeve Walker explained the circumstances surrounding this and suggested that Council expropriate the land, have it surveyed and pay a reasonable sum for it. The Council agreed to do and upon motion by Reeve Walker, a hyster covering the above was given a 1st, 2nd, and 3rd reading, and passed.

The petition previously tabled regarding eradication of Scotch thistle, cobnels, came up for attention. It was explained this question was really up to the people in any given area. If sufficient people sign the petition, the government may declare that area a noxious area. The Council really had nothing to do with it.

A number of ratepayers had written regarding extra time for the payment of taxes under consolidation. This was left in the hands of the secretary to adjust.

Letter from A. M. Matheson re taxes on land owned by him. A cheque had been sent but a small balance was still owing. The secretary was instructed to advise Mr Matheson re the small balance.

After a discussion concerning tax collections the following motion by Councillor Swabey was passed:

"Resolved we the Municipal Council do now go on record that the municipality's interests would be better served by a more strenuous collecting of taxes; and further move we do now inform the ratepayers of this policy which will be applied this season; and furthermore any ratepayer with arrears would be well advised to make arrangements with the Municipal secretary as soon as possible.

Mr. J. Laudin interviewed Council regarding a minor dispute with Mr. Albert Hay regarding bone. The old gentleman could not speak English and Councillor Anderson came to the rescue as interpreter. It was finally left for Councillor Kortzaan to fix up.

Letter from Grain Dealers' Assn. re taxing grain dealers who have an elevator, etc. Some claim they are merely truckers but have grain dealers' license issued by Grain Board. Suggested that Council impose business tax. As Council did not know of anyone falling into this class, no action was taken.

Letter from Otto Lindgren who wanted to know if he can get title to his land. He purchased this some years ago, paid a portion of the total price and have kept the current taxes paid up. This was another case of a block between the Department and the Municipality re selling land. It was suggested that Mr. Lindgren come into the office and make another deal when an effort would be made to have the Department approve.

A motion ratifying the action of Councillor Kortzaan in issuing Chief Olson S.W. 10-50-20, was passed.

The Union Tractor Co. informed Council it had a credit of $20.20 which would be applied on parts. This is the balance left on the purchase. Council instructed the secretary to request to the company that they return the cheque in favor of other caterpillar as soon as possible.

Communication from J. D. Adams acknowledging payment of note for $50.00.

Communication from Union Tractor and Harvester Co. re note cancelled.

Councillor Swabey reported on the road and upon motion by Councillor Holmberg, Weed Inspector was to be notified to give 20 days weed inspect. ion for municipality starting as soon as possible. He is to notify each Councillor when in his division.

Letter from Department of putting "free education" regarding municipal affairs as they purchased two sets of books, one at Edmonton and charged same to municipality. None of the councillors or the secretary, or anyone else that the council knows purchased them. The amount involved is 90 cents, and it looks like the King's printer department is out just that much.

Letter re Card children tabled.

Hospital account was presented re Mrs. Emile Pelissero, Edgerton. The account came from St. Ann's hospital, Hardisty. Mrs. Pelissero was a former resident of Hay Lake, but has been gone from there for at least eighteen months. Council considered they were not responsible.

Letter from Mr. McLean re George and Henry Waslake, informing Council that it would be used in small debts court. The case arose over two horses being killed on the railroad last winter, the Waslake brothers claim ing a gain in railroad fence had been closed thus preventing their horses going on right through. The Council disclaims responsibility.

A municipal cheque made out to Mr. Cuthbert which was recently reported lost, had turned up at the bank. Payment had been stopped on it, pending explanations.

Mrs. Hertz of Kingman applied for Mothers' Allowance. After discussion Council recommended $20.00 per month.

Letter from Peter Kay re bad roads near his place. Mr. Kay wished to work out school and municipal taxes. Secretary was instructed to advise Mr. Kay that he could not work out school taxes and only on excessive municipal taxes. There was a fairly good road put on the south side of his place last year.

It was reported that Mrs. Margaret Ferguson, age 58, had only been employed by the municipality to the amount $15.00 per month. Last November Council had recommended the raise of $20.00 per month. On motion of Councillor Swabey, it was recommended that Mrs. Ferguson be allowed $20.00 per month pension.

Letter from Dr. Armstrong re Emery Phillips. Dr. Armstrong had underwood Dr. Law to have said patients to the bottom of the barrel including the mixture so strongly impregnated with salt that poisons the bugs. If the meal containing salt is fed as bait, a small allowance be thoroughly stirred immediately before feeding.

HAIL

Hail storms occur in many parts of the world, and the loss in dollars and cents is appreciable each year. It is quite a substantial sum. The severity hail storms, like the tornado, as always small, but represents such terrific expression of fury, and the destruction it causes is so complete, that it is always dreaded.

Alberta is a province that is particularly susceptible to hail storms. Meteorologists of repute claim that these hail storms occur here than in any other province or state throughout the world. It is difficult to explain why this should be.

Hail is formed in the turbulent regions at the front of a thunder storm, according to Mr. W. J. Humphreys of the United States Weather Bureau. The air currents in the vicinity of such a storm are always in violent commotion upward and downward, but from relatively cold and warm regions of the atmosphere, and the moisture is carried upward it condenses into frozen particles known as hail. Hail is formed at the back and in front of a storm several times before it finally drops to earth. Each time it rises it receives a fresh coating of ice. That is why large hail stones frequently show several alternate layers.

An interesting hail storm has occurred at various times in the earth's history. At Dallas, Texas, in 1926, there of ice fell on streets and buildings during fifteen minutes, and in 1928 Alberta reported a substantial fall of the size of baseballs. The losses in the latter storm in vicinity were estimated at $2 million.

Ein interessanter Hagelsturm ereignete sich in Texas. Während 15 Minuten sauste ein Regen von Eisstücken auf Strassen und Häuser nieder, die die Grösse von Baseballs hatten. Der Schaden wurde auf 2 Millionen Dollar geschätzt.

At Potter, Nebraska, on July 6th, 1928, hail stones as large as grapefruit fell. One was found to be seven inches in circumference and to weigh 1 1-2 pounds.

At a village in Rumania on May 1st, 1928, six children were killed and seven adults were badly injured by hail during the celebration of the May Day festival. In 1928 on July 6th, two men and one animal were killed in Iowa by hail.

Tourist traffic to Alberta parks is showing a substantial gain already this season, according to information received by officials of the Alberta Motor Association.

Up to the end of June, more than 17,000 motor cars had entered Banff Waterton and Jasper parks, an increase of more than 1,000 as compared with the similar period of last year.

At Waterton alone, the increase was over 75 per cent, revealing the growing popularity of this southern park which is becoming known to the international boundary line and therefore convenient for many visitors from the States.

At Jasper there was a 50 per cent increase in traffic while at Banff the increase was substantial because of the opening of the new entrance to the park.

New aviation course is being offered in Alberta. The Institute of Technology and Art, Calgary, arranged under the auspices of the Dominion-Provincial youth training plan in co-operation with the RCAF, the course extends over a year. The training offered is the same as that given to aspirants in the RCAF.

A Four Poster Bed-

You know, one of those massive things that had curtains round it and "valences" from the bed to the floor. Grandmother and grandfather believed they were the last word in nocturnal comfort, and in their day and age, grandmother and grandfather were quite right.

Now, we don't expect you would have one of these for sale. If you possessed one you would likely want to keep it. But among your possessions you probably have something that to you or your family has outlived its usefulness, even though quite good.

A piece of farm machinery, plow, disc, mower, rake, binder or even a tractor that could be turned into money, if the right person knew you had it for sale.

Livestock,—horses, cattle, pigs, sheep, chickens, —perhaps even a goat—change owners quite quickly sometimes when the right people are brought together.

And household effects—there is always someone on the look-out for a bargain. A young couple that needs that extra table, stove, chairs or any one of the many article- of furniture found in the average home.

LOCAL BRANCH CANADIAN LEGION TO BUILD CAIRN

On Friday last at a meeting of those interested, chiefly members of the Canadian Legion, it was decided to erect a cairn in memory of those who fell and those who served from this district in the great war.

The site chosen is on the corner of 3rd Ave. and Main Street. The town has reserved two lots upon which there is a natural growth of trees, making a very nice background. The Canadian Legion will supervise and Mr. Hisey, we understand, will have charge of erecting the cairn.

It is exceedingly gratifying to note, that after a period of over 20 years, memory and thoughtfulness is still strong and virile.

Miss Vinh Anderson of Bruhnen and Miss Laura Dunnett of Edmonton spent a few days with their aunt, Mrs. Robert Donald of Deville.

A surprise party was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Carlson of Deville last Saturday. The music was supplied by Mr. Lloyd Campion, Mr. Albert Gladue and Mr. Fred Donald and brother Jerry. Lunch was served and—as the saying goes—a good time was had by all.

A group motored down from Edmonton to the party, which made the event all the more enjoyable.

CAIRN NOW COMPLETED

The Cairn in memory of those from this district who served in the Great War and particularly to those who paid the supreme sacrifice is now completed.

The draft was made by Mr. J. Letourneau and the work was done by Mr. Hoey. It looks very nice and is a credit to the artists in charge of his charge.

The Cairn itself is built of native granite and stands in the centre of a cement platform of steps. It is further enhanced by rock gate and corner posts, and has a nice background of trees. It is located on the corner of 2nd. avenue and main street.

In the near future a bronze plaque will be added and on a date yet to be decided an unveiling ceremony will take place.

L.C.C. NEWS

The monthly meeting of the L.C.C. Office was due not many months ago. He was quite old, and we really should have known him, but we did not.

"I would like to see the editor", he said.

Upon being ushered into the office and given a chair, we awaited his business, and to tell the truth, we were expecting a "touch". Frequently fellows come in and ask for assistance.

After a moment or two of hesitation, he said:

"Well, Mr. Editor, you have been sending me the paper for some long time and I haven't paid; how much do I owe you?"

Observing the puzzled look on our face, he said, I am Mr.

Now we were on familiar ground. We looked up the book, and answered "Twenty Dollars, that's a lot of money isn't it."

He replied, "Yes, but I want to pay my debts and came in to see you. I figured if you were a fair man I could do business with you. Times haven't been good you know."

We looked at the old gent again and said, how about calling it half?

"That's right", he said! and handed us ten dollars.

"You're sure you can afford this?" we said rather hurriedly.

"Oh yes", he replied. "I figured if you were a fair man, I could do business with you. That's quite alright."

A brief conversation ensued, after which he departed, and we have not seen him since.

But wherever he is and whatever he is doing he carries with him our best wishes for his happiness.

He was old, but he was game!

HASTINGS LAKE

Saturday night turned out to be just what the Winnum Club ordered for their weiner roast and quite a jolly crowd gathered around the benfire with their sticks and stories. Mr. Campion brought along his gramophone and an armful of records, thus doing his bit towards the entertainment. After everyone had their fill of weiners, little Miss Doreen May Johnson drew the ticket for the afghan. Congratulations go to Mr. Tommy Ryan the cream man from Edmonton, who held the winning ticket. Mr. Ryle then brought out his harpipes and kept the crowd busy guessing the tunes he played and for yours truly that was an impossibility. It was around 12.30 when the gathering broke up. The weiner roast was a bit different from the usual line of entertainment held here and I am sure everyone enjoyed their evening.

On our sick list for last week were Mrs. Holmes and Mr. Rowland. We trust that by now both are again feeling like their old selves.

Miss Chick Tough is in Edmonton keeping house for her aunt, Mrs. Hodges. Mr. and Mrs. Tough have two of their grandchildren from Edmonton visiting them for a few days.

Mrs. Flynn and her son Lawrence of Edmonton were visitors at the Rowlands last week.

Mr. Art Rowland and Mr. Chester Stower having finished their work on the road at Poen, spent last Thursday and Friday at home before moving to their new job at Ponoka.

Miss Mildred Rowland must be doing real well in the boat business. Her thanks are due to all who loaned cars and helped in any way to make the day a success. (Thank you one and all.)

"My Lucky Star" For Next Tuesday

Sonja Henie in another triumph of the silver screen comes to the Variety Theatre, Tofield next Tuesday. As on previous occasions this charming and talented actress and marvellously expert skater will fill you with admiration as few screen stars can do. "My Lucky Star" is a love story par excellence and is surrounded by the glamour of some of the greatest skating spectacles ever produced. Supporting Sonja Henie are such well known stars as Richard Greene, Joan Davis, Arthur Treacher and many others. You will like Sonja Henie in "My Lucky Star" Additional features include comedy and newsreel Usual admission. show starts at 9:00 p.m.

Her famous boat Eb and Zeb is so used to being on the go that it went for a row all by itself the other night. It was seen calmly drifting by Westlake's and was finally found at Tough's.

Miss Corine and Miss Bertha Gladue with Miss Mildred and Mr. Sydney Rowland rode up to Minnith the evening Mr. Baker was there with his lantern aflame.

Mrs. Herb Rainer, formerly Miss Hazel Westlake underwent a serious operation in Edmonton last week. We sincerely hope the operation was a success and wish her a speedy and complete recovery. Mrs. Westlake and Dolly were in to see her last Monday.

Miss Freda Holmes is spending this week at the Lake with her parents and Miss Vera is in the city with her grandmother. Mrs. Holmes had her father and mother out at the lake with her last week.

SYNOPSIS

Barry Haverll goes hunting for a cousin of his, Jesse Conroy, known as the Laredo Kid, who murdered his brother Robert. Barry is befriended by Judge Blue and his daughter, Lucy. The Judge invites Barry up to visit him and there Barry meets Jesse's sweetheart Irene on the railway train. Judge Blue rescues up from behind, knocks Barry unconscious. Barry escapes however, and meets and old man named Timberline, who also is gunning for the Laredo Kid. After several years of searching Barry returns to Judge Blue's home where he meets a man called Tom Haverll whom he accuses of being his cousin Jesse, Jr., against Barry, he comes convinced of this fact and they have a gun battle, both getting hurt. Recovered, Barry discovers Tom Haverll has amassed many furs when he leaves. He also finds evidence to show that Laredo has something on Judge Blue and that Laredo has been holding him in his power. Barry and Tom Timberline, the Judge goes to the cabin where Tom and Lucy are. Timberline takes the Judge and Laredo to the kitchen while Barry tries to tell Lucy that her new sweetheart is no good.

"Timber!" he called sharply. "Here I be, Barry. Want me to kill the two buzzards after all?"

"Herd them out on the back porch! Then get on your horse; I guess it's there handy, isn't?"

"Never handled," said Timberline. "I'm not going to talk all night to this girl. And when you and I go — well, we'll go fast."

"Santa me," said Timberline, and then barked out to the Judge and Tom Haverll: "Yah heard it March, yuh two. I reckon what Barry's got to say to the lady can best be said later-tate."

"Lucy," said Barry, "first you've got to believe this: Tom Haverll is the Laredo Kid."

She scoffed at him. Then she said, brightly beautiful, as she so much smaller than he, gave the impression of looking down on him from some lofty height. "Tom told me all that he knows about you as we drove here tonight."

"He's tried to make you think that I'm Laredo?"

He heard the three men out on the back porch: he heard a door close. A moment later Timberline called out, "Ready to ride when you are, Sundown."

At that Barry suddenly caught Lucy up in his arms and ran with her She tried to scream; he clamped his big hand tight over her mouth. She bit him but he kept her still. He threw her up into the Judge's saddle, held her with one hand while he managed his own horse and mounted, then he roared out to Timberline:

"Ride, pardner! Sock your spurs in and ride."

He started his own horse and the Judge's at a run, heading back toward the mountains.

It was a mad thing to do but mad ventures have a way of being won After them, not knowing what it was all about, yelling like a Comanche, came old Timberline.

"I love you, and you'd better know it," said Barry.

"I'm Tom Haverll's wife," she reminded him.

That was a good half hour after they had raced away from Tom Haverll's ranch house.

"Hi, Timber!" he yelled. "Shore I along back to camp. Tell Ken March to have ansh w a dozen men on our payroll to take care of the Judge and Laredo if they do come out that way be'ring for us."

"What about you?" yipped Timberline

"Don't know. Oh, I'm all right, too," and I'm taking good care of Lucy here."

Barry stopped to blow the hard-ridden horses; he had also a thought to Lucy whom he had put through a difficult thirty minutes.

"I'm not afraid of you!" said Lucy.

"I'm glad of that, Lucy," said Barry gently. "Of course there's no reason why you should be afraid of me, but I thought you might be, anyhow I'm glad."

That made her defiance seem a small unnecessary thing, and so it angered her.

"Let me go!" she cried furiously. "I say, let me go; do you hear me? I am going back to Tom—to my husband."

"He's not your husband, Lucy. You know that. A preacher just came and said a mouthful of words. Nothing could make you and him man and wife. And if he was your husband, you wouldn't have him long. I'm going to kill him."

"Murdered Coward and murderer!"

"No, it wouldn't be murder," said Barry calmly. "Not even if I came up on him from behind and killed him before he knew it. It would be what they call execution, Lucy girl."

She made some song with him again, marking no attempt to escape.

"Remember that night more than three years ago, down in Tylers rule?" said Barry.

"Huh?" said Lucy.

"You saw what happened," continued Barry. "You saw the Judge hammer me over the head. You didn't see the man in the barn, but you heard the Judge call him Laredo. That man was Jesse Conroy, my cousin Jesse; and he is Laredo and he is Tom Haverll."

"I don't believe it!"

"You understand that the Judge took a hand when he did, putting me out, to keep me from the chance of being killed if Laredo and I fought it out as we were bound to. And you know why he cut in, to save my life long enough to find out where I'd got a fistful of fur."

He gave her her chance to speak but she had nothing to say.

"You know him that day for a liar for a robber, for a man to run in double harness with the killer, Laredo. You came pretty close that night running around with me, a stranger, with me, a stranger. You were crazed."

She spoke up then, and sharply enough. "What about tonight?"

"You saw him kill a man, you know it was murder. And Tom Haverll came along, the good-looking murdering hound-dog, and married him! And I tell you," and his voice rang out, "I tell you again it wasn't because you were in love with Tom Haverll; it was because you just had to run away from that big white house with its Judge Blue trimmings."

"No!" said Lucy. "It wasn't that—"

"Don't lie to me, girl."

"You've got to let me go, Barry Haverll."

"I'm going to let you go—set you free—turn you loose," said Barry, and there was a deep sadness in his voice. "Not from me, Lucy girl. Free from the horror of the whole thing. I'm going to make you happy with just three or four little words. Ready, Lucy?"

"Have you gone crazy?" demanded Lucy.

Barry said simply: "Judge Blue isn't your father. That's true, dear. You're not Lucy Blue at all. You're Barry!"

"That's part of what I've got to tell you," he went on. "I didn't know until that night Tom Haverll and I shot each other. He knew. He had proof of all this hid out at the cabin to where we were. I got my strap with what he'd hid. As soon as he could, he tried to make sure of you, marrying you—"

"He loves me!" said Lucy, trying to sound defiant, but her voice failed.

"That's natural," conceded Barry. "Any man would."

"But tell me—"

"You're going to ride with me. I'm going to show you."

They rode, Lucy for a while in the most profound meditation of her life. Not Lucy Blue at all—not the Judge's daughter.

"Barry! Tell me everything!"

"I'll not tell you anything because I'm going to show you what Tom Haverll had hid at the cabin in the mountains; and you'll know as much as I do.

"I've another place, where I've been hid out, getting over the attack of hot lead I caught from Tom Haverll. I left the things there that I want to show you. Sarboe's there, too."

After a long, long while of threading devious ways through wilderness intricacies, Barry lifted his arm in a point; she saw a flicker of light across an inky ledge, on the top of a de under the cliffs.

"There's Sarboe," he called cheerily

Before Barry had the vaguest inkling that anything was wrong, one sprang up all about him; rocks and bushes of a moment ago seemed to turn into men. He saw here and there the faint glint of starlight upon their weapons.

"Both hands up, high, Barry Haverll!" shouted the exultant voice of Jake Goodby, Tom Haverll's foreman, a slack-jawed, slope-browed lither.

Barry obeyed, saying nothing, his eyes darting everywhere at once, seeking to make out how many there were, looking for some avenue of escape.

Lucy fell a gun barrel driven into her side. A man called sharply to her, "Get your pawn up too!"

"I'm Lucy Blue. I am Mrs. Tom Haverll. Tom Haverll's wife. We were married just tonight."

Lucy ran on excitedly: "You've got Jakob? You're not to hurt him, you know."

"Sure I know! Tom wants him in talk first. I'm wonderin' if Sarboe'll ever talk again! He's so scared he can't say a word. That here is Barry Haverll, ain't it?"

"Yes," answered Lucy hurriedly. "And you're not to hurt him either. Tom wants him in to talk, too."

"Sure! You'll all right!" laughed Jake Goodby. Mrs. Tom now, huh? Say, that's fine."

Diamond, Barry came down out of the saddle and stood still as a rope was double-hitched about his wrists and his hands were tied at his back. Six or eight of Tom Haverll's young acolytes dragged him off to join Sarboe where the latter, bound with himself was propped up against a log.

The lammer his shoulder against Sarboe's by way of compassionate greeting and spoke for the first time.

"They got us all right, Sarboe," he said disgracefully. Like a fool I rode into their trap."

Sarboe, writhing in his bonds, could only grunt.

"I'm sorry for Lucy girl," he said, "but I'm glad she had never married Tom Haverll. I was because you just had to run away from that big white house with its Judge Blue trimmings."

Canadians

New "Wealth" for Mammon

Yellowknife—Believed to be one of the richest gold fields in the Yellowknife area, and perhaps the most promising in Canada, a strike was made about 30 miles east of here by Peter Leader and Davidson. Surface assays are running from $2,000 to $3,000 per ton of ore.

Surface showings range from 5 to 30 feet in width over a known distance of three miles. More discoveries in the area are being reported daily.

Precious Preacher

Vancouver—Rev. Charles P. Jaynes Jr. nine years old, arrived here recently and said he had come "because I believe Canada is the work of God."

Believed to be the youngest ordained Minister in the world, the reverend youngster has married several couples in the United States and has accepted pulpits in 130 of the largest American cities.

He was ordained by the International Ministerial Association two years ago.

Sunny Alberta

Edmonton:—Marked increases in the number of American tourists travelling to Edmonton and northern Alberta are reported by J. A. McNeill, manager of the Edmonton Motor Association. Cars have registered through every state in the Union, he said, adding that the south side of the continent's most populated area is running between 200 and 300 people.

Election Data

Ottawa—Dominion election officials estimate that 6,500,000 Canadian citizens are entitled to vote at the next general election. However, it is expected that less than five million will exercise their franchise.

Electing the 245 members of parliament will cost the Dominion government approximately $2,500,000 and the party machines untold sums.

The 110,000 persons who will be employed to handle election machinery will each receive $2.50—polling booths throughout Canada.

Meanwhile, Prime Minister Mackenzie King said he did not consider the European outlook settled enough. Should it have improved somewhat, the possibility still remains that Parliament may have to meet again this year to decide "peace or war."

No Difference

Winnipeg—Hon. W. D. Herridge told a public meeting here that he stand against Prime Minister King if the "united progressive parties of Prince Albert" offer him nomination .....even though the C.C.F. has decided to place a candidate in that constituency.

Major Herridge stated he was sorry J. S. Woodsworth had refused to co-operate with the new Democracy Movement, but he appealed to Canadians and file to support "if a party are not in doubt," said the leader. "We want security, freedom to live. Perhaps they want security more than Mr. Woodsworth, when socialism stands in the way of security."

"What can seven members ever do for humanity?" he asked, and declared there was no good in having "minority suicide squads" in Parliament.

Marquis Loses First Place In The West

For the first time in about 24 years, Marquis, that fine sterling variety which for so long has occupied first place in the West, has now been obliged to make way for another variety.

The annual survey made by the Semple Grain Company on the distribution of wheat varieties over the West, reveals that Thatcher is now the dominant variety for the three Western Provinces, having increased from 14.1 per cent in 1938 to 36 per cent in 1939. Marquis comes next, now occupying 32.2 per cent of the wheat acreage as compared with 54.4 per cent in 1938. Red Bobs has advanced to third place, being seeded now on 12.1 per cent of the acreage, as compared with 10 per cent a year ago. Garnet has fallen back to fifth spot of the acreage, as compared with 8.1 per cent in 1938. Durum, too, has gone down, now occupying 3.5 per cent as compared with 4.5 last year. Reward also has lost ground. Rescues now occupies 3.5 per cent of the acreage and Apex 1.5 per cent, as compared with negligible quantities last year.

Thatcher, it will be remembered, had a two years' start over Marquis and Apex. Rescues, Apex and Regent each year, and in future prairiefarers, will no doubt substantially cut down the head now held by Thatcher.

In ALBERTA Marquis occupies 43.2 per cent of the acreage in wheat, Red Bobs 35.1 per cent, Garnet 9.6 per cent, Reward 4.7 per cent, Thatcher 1.5 per cent, Durum .2 per cent and miscellaneous varieties 5.6 per cent.

In SASKATCHEWAN Thatcher occupies 52.5 per cent of the acreage in wheat, Marquis 23.3 per cent, Rescues 8.4 per cent, Apex 2.7 per cent, Reward 2.4 per cent, Garnet 1.6 per cent, and miscellaneous varieties 3.6 per cent.

In MANITOBA Thatcher occupies 51.8 per cent of the acreage in wheat, Rescues 26.3 per cent, Durum 17.3 per cent, Marquis 2.4 per cent, Apex 0.2 per cent, Marquis 0.9 per cent and miscellaneous varieties 1.0 per cent.

This Little Pig Went To Market

And this one stayed at home. Well, sometimes it did and sometimes it didn't. You see, a farmer might have invested a classified ad "pigs for sale", and then Mr. Pig or Messrs. Piggies would simply have a change of home. Many farmers who have pigs or other kinds of livestock for sale make use of classified ads to let other farmers know of it. Classified ads are cheap, effective, and cover a wide range. Incidentally, the need for grain in fact almost any used saleable article can often be met by means of the humble "classified." Classified ads "produce" things sometimes too. Somebody wanting something simply say so through the medium of a classified, and presto, somebody bobs up with just the wanted article for sale.

Motor Patrols Win High Praise

Warm praise for the work of the motor cycle patrols operated by the Edmonton and Calgary branches of the Alberta Motor Association comes in year into these A. M. A. offices.

Since the opening of the summer season these patrols have been on the highways radiating from each city. They have won the confidence and esteem of many motorists by their courtesy and willingness to aid in any emergency.

Many touring parties which had broken down on the highway, possibly through some defect in the car's equipment or mechanism, have good reason to be thankful that an A.M.A. patrol came along in the nick of time.

The patrols at the same time have done valuable work in checking up on drivers, drawing attention to infractions of motor vehicle regulations and as a result winning the gratitude of many careful drivers.

Head-lights and tail lights were repaired on cars and the names taken of those who were lacking equipment.

Active daily throughout the summer months, the patrols have proven the outstanding value of their work and have won many friends for the A.M.A., while performing vital service in making Alberta's highways safer for motorists.

1939 WHEAT MARKETING LEGISLATION—

THE IMPORTANCE of wheat as the principal crop of Canadian Agriculturalists is reflected in the time and attention given to it by Dominion legislators. During this year several Acts have been passed dealing with marketing problems as regards wheat and other products, but with harvesting almost upon us, interest for the immediate present centres on wheat marketing legislation. There are three 1939 Acts dealing with wheat marketing, and a fourth related to it. They can be listed as follows:

Canadian Wheat Board Amendment Act.
Wheat Co-operative Marketing Act.
The Grain Futures Act.
The Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

The Wheat Board Act of 1935 was in response to a definite condition then prevailing. It was to be the medium of disposing of an existing large surplus without interfering with the marketing of the current crop. There are many people, however, who believe that this is the right way to market wheat and partly because of this and partly because a condition similar to that of 1935 exists, the Wheat Board is being continued.

An advance of 70c. per bushel for No. 1 Northern, basis Fort William, is now guaranteed the farmer on quantities up to 5000 bushels. By means of participation certificates the farmer will receive any additional amounts paid by the Wheat Board sell at a price higher than 70c. However, wheat has been below 70c. on an average over the year only eight times in 50 years.

In the Wheat Co-operative Marketing Act, 1939, an attempt is being made to establish on a sound financial basis, a system for those farmers who wish to market their wheat co-operatively. Under the Act any group of producers or elevator operators can set up a selling agency to handle wheat on a co-operative basis at any time. Under this arrangement the government will guarantee an advance of 60c. a bushel, basis No. 1 Fort William. The difference in the amount of guarantee of 70c. under one plan and 60c. under another, is explained by the government contracting the wheat under the Wheat Board set-up and the Co-operatives controlling the wheat under the Co-operative set-up. Under either plan the producer gets every cent for his wheat, savings, after administration costs have been taken care of.

For the benefit of those who wish to use the facilities of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, and for the benefit of the general public also, an Act entitled "An Act to Provide for the Supervision and Regulation of Trading in Grain Futures" has been passed. Under this Act arrangements have been made to supervise and regulate trading in grain futures on the Exchange. The Act enables the Board to obtain records and information regarding grain trading and provides for the appointment of a supervisor to act under the Board, with authority to report to the Board conditions prejudicial to the public interest arising from speculation. If at any time the Board is of the opinion that transactions in grain futures are causing undue fluctuations in the price of grain, it may fix margin requirements and limit trading in and holding by individuals of grain futures.

The Prairie Farm Assistance Act deals with monies paid to farmers due to crop failure; also to Emergency crop conditions. The Act provides that when in the opinion of the Minister of Agriculture conditions warrant it, any year may be termed "an emergency year." This year 1939-40, commencing August 1st, has been proclaimed an emergency year, and the provisions of the Act, in this respect are now in effect. Emergency year assistance is as follows:

If the average yield is 4 bushels or under, the payment will be $2 per acre on half of the cultivated acreage of the farmer for each farmer living in a township that such average yield is the maximum number of acres on which a man can receive payment is 200, so the total payment to a farmer cannot exceed $400. The 1939-40 payment will be made regardless of the price of wheat.

If the average yield is over 4 bushels and not more than 8 bushels in a township, each farmer residing therein will receive $1.50 per acre on half his cultivated acreage up to 200 acres with a maximum payment of $300. The farmer with 100 acres cultivated would receive $75.00. The 1939-40 payment will be made regardless of the price of wheat.

If the average yield is over 8 bushels and not more than 12 bushels in a township, each eligible farmer residing in such township shall receive one dollar per acre on half his cultivated acreage, that he cannot be paid on more than 200 acres so that the maximum amount a farmer may receive who lives in a township with a 9 to 12 bushel yield is $200. A farmer will receive this amount in this class of township provided the average price is 70 cents or less per bushel for No. 1 Northern cash wheat. For each cent the average price is above 70 cents, 10 cents per acre will be deducted from the acreage payment so that at 80 cents the award will disappear. For instance, if the average price is 75 cents a farmer with 400 acres cultivated would receive 50 cents per acre on half of 400, which is 200 acres, a total of $100.

The Crop Failure assistance applies in areas of 135 townships and has different regulations than Emergency Year Assistance.

Danger Of Dust

The dust explosion in the Roseboom grain elevator in Chicago on May 11th—which resulted in a loss of nine lives, destruction of five large grain elevators, injuries to 39 men and a property loss of about $3,500,000—probably started with the ignition of grain dust at the bottom of one of the legs, or vertical grain conveyors, of Calumet Elevator According to an announcement by the United States department of agriculture. A careful investigation of the disaster has just been conducted by Dr. David J. Price and Hyman E. Brown of the department's Chemical Engineering Research Division.

Several years ago research by Dr. Price's division showed that fine dust in suspension, such as is commonly found around grain elevators is highly explosive, needing only a spark of flame to touch it off. A primary explosion and fire may be followed almost instantly with another explosion and fire. Fire made it impossible to determine condition of equipment where the explosion originated.

General Motors Announces J. E. Johnson Sales Head

Oshawa, Ontario, July 17th:-(Special Dispatch) J. E. Johnson, previously assistant general sales manager for Chevrolet Division of General Motors Corporation, becomes Director of Sales for General Motors of Canada, Limited, in the most important shakeup in a number of appointments announced today by H. J. Carmichael, Vice President and General Manager.

Mr. Johnson's appointment is the culmination of a brilliant career with General Motors. He joined the Chevrolet organization in 1923, and was promoted rapidly through the sales organization, later successively manager of four zones. In 1934 he became regional manager of the southwest region and on April 1, 1938, assistant general sales manager.

Now, wife still a young man, Mr. Johnson caps distinguished record by becoming the director of sales of Canada's largest Automotive organization.

Live Stock Branch

The Live Stock Branch is concerned with the rearing and production of horses, cattle, sheep and swine. There are two main functions performed by this branch, namely, the improvement of the quality of live stock and the administration of such acts and regulations as may be imposed by the Legislative Assembly.

The improvement of the live stock of the province is the task of great importance, and it is gratifying to see that progress is being made as is indicated for instance in the percentage of select hogs marketed in 1938 and in previous years. The acquisition of high awards at exhibitions in Canada and the United States is further proof of the advancement being made.

The Live Stock Branch is at present operating three policies which are aimed at improving the quality of cattle, swine and horses by providing high quality sires for farmer's herds.

The Bull Exchange Policy permits the farmer to trade his inferior animal for a pure_bred young animal of approved type. The farmer receives the market price for the inferior bull which applied on the purchase price of the new one, and he makes up the difference in cash. The Department of Agriculture contributes to the policy by paying the freight in on the old bull and the freight out on the new one. Last year about 400 bulls were exchanged in this way, and a larger number is likely to be exchanged this year. One requirement of the policy is that an inferior bull must be turned in for each animal

The Week in Edmonton

Completion of arrangements for distributing certain farm repair parts through the Provincial Marketing Board was announced last week by Premier William Aberhart. A supply of parts, believed to be sufficient to meet this season's needs has been purchased and will be distributed by farmers from depots centered in Edmonton, Red Deer, Calgary and Lethbridge.

While it was not the wish of the government to interfere with existing agencies for parts distribution, said the Premier, it was the intention to help the farmer cut down the overhead costs of production ... so that he may compete more equitably with producers who are not so handicapped by long and expensive freight hauls.

*****

The Premier also stated that Geo. A. Clark, Chairman of the Provincial Marketing Board, had recently returned from manufacturing centres in the east with the right to manufacture some parts within Alberta. "Parts that can, will be made here strictly according to specifications. Parts that cannot be made here will be purchased ..."

*****

Hearings by A. A. Carpenter, Chairman of the board of public utility commissioners, of objections to the recent cut in the price of milk are being continued in Edmonton. By order of the board, the price of milk was reduced one cent per quart after June 30th.

The reason for the cut was that it was thought production costs were lowered 38 cents per hundred pounds of milk in Edmonton and in the country since the reduction was 40 cents per 100 pounds.

*****

Witnesses appearing before Mr. Carpenter have strenuously objected to the cut and point out that increased producers are not higher in the summer than in the winter. High standard of equipment, etc., demanded by the health department help to increase the costs of production, in Edmonton, one witness said that 183 dairy farmers are affected by the price cut "who have at no time been getting more than the costs of production." Another witness declared that if the new price of $1.36 per hundred pounds of milk is continued each summer, he is going to stop delivering.

Meanwhile at Calgary, the royal commission under Mr. Justice McGillivray continues to probe into Alberta's oil industry. Reductions up to two cents have been announced by one oil company and it is reported the others will follow suit immediately. There is no cause given for the reductions.

The price goes into effect at once to enable farmers buying oil for harvest to take advantage of it. Savings of many thousands of dollars will thus be made by the Alberta farmers.

Mr. Justice McGillivray stated recently that if it was deemed advisable, in the interests of the Alberta consumer, the commission would not hesitate to recommend the elimination of oil jobbers. North Star Oil, Arctic Oil, Great West Distributors, McColl-Frontenac Oil and Maple Leaf Petroleum were firms named in the evidence.

The jobber's side of the story was presented by Geo. A. Mackenzie, president of the Great West Distributors Ltd. "Elimination of the jobber," he claimed, "would place the petroleum business in the hands of a few mighty corporations." He thought, on the other hand, that refiners should be prevented from going into the retail business. This, he said, would place the oil industry on a healthier competitive basis.

LAKESHORE

Last Friday a very delightful shower was given in honor of Miss Myrtle Bethel at Mrs. T. E. Soule's. Some 50 ladies and a number of young men attended, and the gifts were received most liberally. During the afternoon Mrs. R. Chevrenne sang numerous solos which were greatly enjoyed. Mrs. Murray conducted an interesting contest, and Lauren Wood gave a reading touching on the high lights of Myrtle's career, Miriam Soule and Nola Shaw presented the gifts to the bride-to-be and Mrs. Bradley assisted her to unpack them. A delicious lunch was served and guests over the ten cups closed a very happy afternoon. We were all especially pleased to see Mrs. Bethel out again on the occasion.

What might have been a serious accident occurred on the highway west of Tofield last Thursday evening on the car in which Mrs. Irma Simpson and Ethel Graham were travelling when a car ran into them in the semi-darkness. The car was damaged but both girls escaped with a shaking up and a few bruises.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Phillips are well known locally, and their friends extend to them the best of good wishes for a happy and prosperous future.

A number of people will indeed appreciate the fact that at last the road west of Lloyd Wood's corner is having some work done on it.

The annual W. A. garden party was held at the J. W. Robinson home on Thursday afternoon and evening of last week. The day was ideal, though quite hot, and quite a number attended to join in the games and the bountiful supper provided. Many enjoyed respite from the heat by resting in the shade of the trees. Sandwich Spreads

Summer brings the happy prospect of many meals outdoors. Whether picnic, garden party or tea on the lawn, sandwiches will be almost standard equipment. Were it not for the zest and surprising variations and combinations of food which can be planned between two slices of bread, sandwiches would have disappeared from menus long ago. It is true that the standby of all our childhood Sunday School picnics, salmon sandwiches are as popular today as ever and appear regularly at the picnics. But the whole story of sandwiches is not told with salmon. Here are some ideas for making delicious sandwich combinations with other Canadian fish.

Lobster Spread

Combine: Chopped cooked lobster meat; chopped hard-cooked eggs; chopped cucumbers; well seasoned mayonnaise.

Sardine Spread

Mash with a fork a can of large sardines. Combine them with 8 or 10 coarsely chopped stuffed olives, lemon juice and pepper.

This sandwich spread is specially designed for long walks, it won't soak the bread even after hours' standing.

Fish Salad Sandwich Filling

1 cup boiling water
2 tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca
1 cup milk
½ teaspoon pepper
½ teaspoon paprika
1 tablespoon butter
1 cup tuna or other cooked Canadian fish, flaked
2 tablespoons pimientos
1-2 cup pickles, chopped
2 tablespoon vinegar
1-3 cup mayonnaise

Add the tapioca, a couple of double boiler; add dry ingredients and bring to a brisk boil, stirring constantly. Place immediately over rapidly boiling water and cook five minutes, stirring occasionally. Add the remaining ingredients; blend. Cool—mixture will thicken as it cools. Spread on crisp filling.

Sardine Cocktail Spread

Drain 1 small can (6 oz.) boneless Canadian sardines, and mash. Peel and grate 1 medium sized onion and remove seeds and chop very fine, 1 small cucumber, sardines and lemon juice.

C.C.F. CONVENTION HELD IN EDMONTON THIS WEEK

Geo. Abernethy was a delegate at the Provincial C.C.F. Convention held in Edmonton this week. At the convention C. Effect Of Intense Heat

Vegetation during high temperatures throws a great amount of moisture into the air, which causes a high humidity, says A. W. Erickson, well-known crop reporter. Humidity is the blanket which protects the plants from the burning effect of high temperatures. As the wind increases the humidity goes down sharply increasing the transpiring effect.

Hot winds are extremely severe on maturing straw grains in the milk and soft dough stages. The grain making process immediately changes from one of growth and expansion to one of hurried seed production. After this has taken place there is little chance that the grains will resume the process of growth and larger development.

Added to the effect of the heat wave is the exhaustion of reserve moisture under the plants. Crops whilst have a luxuriant growth make a poor showing when compared to reserves when the "heat is turned on".

SYNOPSIS

Barry Haverdl goes hunting for a cousin of his, Jesse Conroy, known as the Laredo Kid, who murdered his brother Robert. Barry is befriended by Judge Blue and his daughter, Lucy. The Judge invites Barry up to visit him and there Barry meets Jesse. He arrives just in time to save himself and of being the Laredo Kid. Judge Blue comes up from behind, Barry unconscious. Barry escapes but is pursued by Jesse. Barry is rescued by Sam Chamberlain, who is also going after the Laredo Kid. After several years of searching Barry returns to Judge Blue's house where he meets a man called Tom Haverdl whom he assumes of being his cousin Jesse, in disguise. Barry becomes convinced of this later and they have a gun battle, in which getting Tom Haverdl is captured. Barry discovers Tom Haverdl has married Lucy whom he loves Barry, the night they are married, kidnaps Lucy, and tells her he loves her. Judge Blue is not her father, he tells her, and Tom Haverdl is the Laredo Kid. On the way to Barry's hideout, Laredo's gang capture Barry Lucy plays up to Laredo for information. Jake Goodby.

Lucy said quietly. "What do you suppose it is that they have hidden out here, Jake and Conroy, knew so that Tom is so anxious to get?"

"I didn't know that part of it," said Jake. "Well, shucks, it don't make no difference to us, does it Lucy?"

"I'd like to, know. Wouldn't you like to know, Jake? Before Tom gets here?"

Jake laughed. "You little devil you, Lucy?"

"I think I can find out something, Jake! I already have and kidding. But we'll have to hurry. Let's see. You call your cowboy back over here where he can't hear. Let me have five minutes—I'll bet you, Jake Goodby, that I can find out!"

"But you look-a-here," he began. "Oh, they can't hurt me!" cried Lucy jumping up. She laughed and clapped her hands down on the butt of Barry's gun. "They're tied up, and look at me wearing this!"

She called the weapon to his attention in haste, rather than have him begin to think about it later.

"Well," said Jake, slowly "it won't do any harm for you to find out what you can. I'll bet they don't open their traps. But go 'bond."

"Hey there, Bunce!" called Jake. "Come here."

Bunce grunted and got up.

"Squat, Bunce. We'll chin. Miss Lucy's steppin' over to ride herd on them two fombeers a minute or two."

Barry watched her wonderingly. She came on until she stood over him, looking down into his upturned face. At first she must say something for Jake Goodby to hear. His suspicions might awake at any moment.

She found it easiest of all to laugh. "You're funny, is it?" said Barry savagely.

"You were so stupid," cried out the girl, still laughing. Then she grew suddenly still, then said in a query stiff sort of voice. "Tom Haverdl will be here soon, Mr Barry. Haverdl—or is Laredo the name? And when he comes—"

"When he comes—" said Barry, and paused on legs up under him, as though to ease cramped muscles.

Lucy stopped a little closer. She was just shaping her lips to whisper hurriedly "Barry, I'm trying to help you!" But she didn't whisper a syllable. There was no time Haverdl came up sending like a snake coming out of a coil. The two strong hands she though so secretly tied behind him flashed out and caught her up, swinging her clear from the ground. At a single bound he was around behind the big rock, and she was huddled at his feet, and his gun was again in his hand.

At the same instant she saw Sarbee surge sideways and launch himself along the ground on hands and knees, as that now he and Barry Haverdl and herself were all behind the boulder. And Barry, armed again, was roaring like an angry bull.

"Jake Goodby! You Bounce! Up with 'em or I'll kill the two of you!"

They were no less astonished than Lucy, the thing had happened so all without warning. The two men got slowly to their feet and put their arms straight up.

"Step this way you two," he commanded sharply, "and better not try any funny business."

Bounce started forward, then stopped to glance sideways at Goodby. Jake had not moved.

Bunce started again; this time Goodby came fumbling along. Barry, watching him narrowly, saw him a mistake slightly. Almost too swiftly for the eye to follow his movement the next minute he sprang sideways to was side, snapped out his gun, and started shooting over Bunce's shoulder.

Bunce yelled out in rage and terror, then jerked out his gun and started blazing away at all that he could see of the man behind the boulder. But poor Bunce never had a chance; Barry's first answering shot broke a leg for him and he fell lurching, Jake fired again but his aim was disturbed and his shot went wild. He was letting the third shot fly when he, like Bunce was bowled over through the legs.

Goodby stirred slightly. Not for still much. Barry came forward, gathered up both men's weapons, then asked curtly of Bunce, "Where's Sarbee, you hurt?"

"I got it in the leg," groaned the cowboy.

Barry called to Sarbee: "Come along here, Sarbee. And bring Mrs. Haverdl with you."

So, "Sarbee came and Lucy with him, one of the men clasped Lucy in his hand, her face white, her eyes looking enormous and brilliant in the firelight.

"Is he dead?" she whispered, looking down on Jake Goodby.

"If he is, he asked for it," snapped Barry "I'm going for the horses," he said and hurried off, merely adding over his shoulder, "Watch both of 'em Sarbee and don't turn that girl loose."

Barry returned hurriedly with the horses, his and Sarbee's and the one that Lucy had ridden here, the Judge's. Also he brought something else, but they did not see it, the flat steel box which he had unearthed from its hiding place and tied to his saddle strings.

"You are not going to take me with you!" cried Lucy as soon as she saw her horse, and began struggling with Sarbee. "Barry Haverdl, you have no right—"

"I don't know what to do with you," he said heavily, starring at her. "Then let me go with you, please, Barry!"

They rode for hours, so long and up and down such trailless slopes that Lucy was drooping wearily in the saddle long before Barry ordered a halt. And when at last they stopped and she slid down quickly she had not the vaguest idea of how whereabouts. Barry had brought them to his old, first cabin, or rather upon the grave just behind it.

"Barry," said Lucy faintly, "Barry—"

"Well?" he demanded coldly, staring up at her.

"I had planned— You see, I couldn't guess you had gotten the upper off—"

"Sarbee's work. They'd had him on the fence; he worked free, got me free."

"Would you believe me," asked Lucy, and bowed herself humbly, as enormously hardened her voice, "if did I told you I was coming to try to get you free?"

"No," he said promptly. "Maybe you just got to knowing you bought a Lady Laredo! I saw you on that log with Jake Goodby—"

Suddenly, without finishing what he was going to say, he moved off through the grave, but to them he saw her had taken a dozen of his long strides. He saw her face in the gray dark among the trees, its rear was all almost indistinguishable in the shadows.

Under its rimed door he saw a thin thread of wan light.

He stepped softly to the door and lifted the latch slowly. Then he began slowly the door open. Opened Barry, demanding explanations.

Barry's answer was a curse: "I don't know what you're up to, but he's had a bullet through him."

Calgary:—Canadians would be well advised to stay in Canada, according to Dr. C. W. Banks, former Calgarian and now assistant professor of surgery at New York's Bellevue hospital. Describing conditions in the United States, Dr. Banks said many Americans landed longingly at Canada where the pace was not so hectic.

"I think that Americans are more enthusiastic about Canada than many of us are," he said. "They admire Canadian stability and see opportunities for a great future here."

One To Go

Ottawa:—Indications that effort will be made to retain Lord Tweedsmuir as Governor General for a second term after November 1940 was given recently by Prime Minister King.

"I have been very happy to have Lord Tweedsmuir here and would like to see him stay for another term," the prime minister said.

Lord Tweedsmuir is Canada's 15th governor general, none of which has served a second term. Although the appointment is a pleasure, the term of the governor general is accepted for five years. Salary allowance paid by the Dominion government is $50,000 per year.

Cheaper—Termination of economic relations between Canada and Japan were advocated by Hon. W. D. Herridge, leader of the New Democracy movement.

Pointing out that the United States had denounced their commercial treaty with Japan, Mayor Herridge said that Canada should do likewise.

"The quicker Japan's head is stated, "the quicker there will be a change in the frontier and meet have a common policy."

Price Control

Victoria:—British Columbia government announced creation of three cents per gallon in wholesale gasoline prices. Creation followed the price spread between wholesale and retail prices at five to six cents.

Vancouver—motorists now buy standard gasoline at 27 cents a gallon, including a seven cent provincial tax.

Bond

Winnipeg—Alberta will be urged to help finance a provincial relief agency for Brit. A resolution to this effect was passed by representatives of the honey industry from Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Those three provinces, together with Alberta and Quebec, are the big honey producers of Canada. Alberta's contribution is about 2,000,000 pounds to Ontario's 9,000,000.

Good Business

Chatham:—A meteor broke from the sky over this quiet little city late July 11. A farmer found a piece of it weighing 80 pounds. He sold it to Dr. Lake Smith for $4.

Now two Ontario universities are trying to buy it from Dr. Lake. They have offered him $200 for the fragment but he isn't interested.

"They want it for nothing," the many doctor stated. "I won't let it go for $200. I have been offered five times that much by the University of Pennsylvania."

New Agreement Pending

Edmonton:—Negotiations governing the licenses of trailers have been suspended, it was announced by Hon. W. A. Fallow. Negotiations are pending for an agreement between railways and all companies which, he believed, "may have a far-reaching effect on highway transportation."

The licenses will be done in the matter until the whole situation has been reviewed to determine what the minister stated.

Financial Efficiency

Ottawa:—Three bond issues amounting to $30,000,000 will be refunded by the Dominion government this fall. This brings the public debt refunded this year to $1,200,000.

In May of this year, $6,300,000 of Canada's debt was refunded and

Livestock Branch

In addition to the livestock improvement policies operated by the Livestock Branch, a number of other important functions are also performed.

The administration of the Stock Inspection Act which safe guards the owners of livestock is a function of the Livestock Branch. Each year a large number of animals shipped to market is error are returned to rightful owners.

The recording of approximately 20,000 brands is done by Livestock Branch. This phase of the industry is closely connected with the work of both inspection officials.

The feeding of livestock for market is becoming of more importance. Under the Feeder Association $60,000,000 of new debt was added to the net operations.

To Be or Not

Ottawa:—Although a writ has been issued for a by-election in Calgary West on September 26, Prime Minister King said he has reached no decision on the date of a general election.

"As long as the situation in Europe continues as it is I don't think we should go to the country," declared Mr. King. "Whether there will be an election this year or not I can not say, because I have not decided."

"I am," continued the prime minister, "keeping in mind European conditions and how they may influence us in many quarters that the government has the confidence of the people."

Guarantee Act, six Feeder Associations were formed last year. The purpose of these organizations is to provide a means whereby the members may obtain funds to purchase sheep and cattle for finishing. The policy was met with general approval in that it aims to establish a permanent feeding policy on Alberta farms. The sale of well-finished cattle and sheep is of distinct advantage, not only to the seller, but to the prestige of the whole Alberta livestock industry.

Other activities of the Livestock Branch include the administration of the Horned Cattle Purchase Act. This Act provides that the cost of one dollar per head shall be deducted from all cattle sold with horns, excepting pedigreed cattle. The moneys so collected are returned to the Department and are used to finance the livestock improvement policies previously mentioned. In the past, losses in shipment due to the injuries inflicted by horned animals have been extremely heavy and it is hoped that the operation of this Act will result in more cattle being delivered beforeshipment is made.

The exhibition of livestock at exhibitions and fairs throughout the Dominion is encouraged by the Livestock Branch, and it is gratifying to observe the increase in the number of awards which Alberta breeders have received at these shows.

All matters referring to livestock general receive the attention of the Livestock Branch, and anyone interested in special problems may obtain information by writing to the Livestock Branch.

THE SITUATION MADE CLEAR—

SPEAKING AT a monster banquet given in his honor on Wednesday on the twentieth anniversary of his becoming leader of the Liberal party in Canada, Prime Minister McKenzie King made clear to those assembled and to thousands upon thousands who were listening to him over the radio, his stand as to the policy of Canada should war come. In effect he said that he would make no statement as to Canada's action regarding a situation not of Canada's own making and which at present nothing was known. It was a wise statement, could even be called a cautious statement.

It would be a bold man indeed to predict world events for the next six months. Expressions of opinion are of course permissible and some men more than others have the opportunity of forming an opinion. But among the best informed men opinions differ, leaving the ordinary person somewhat bewildered with nothing much to do except hope and pray that international conditions may become better and not worse. In the event of hopes not being realised and prayers for peace not reaching fulfillment and an European war breaks out in which Great Britain is a participant it is extremely unlikely that Canada will remain aloof and fail to go to the aide of Great Britain in such an emergency. Exactly what detailed action Canada would take of course depends entirely upon the circumstances then prevailing.

THAT MACHINERY PARTS BUSINESS—

THERE IS nothing to complain about when the government announces they wish to help the farmer by decreasing the cost of production. If they are capable of doing this all well and good but it would appear that this help they may be can give by going into the machinery parts business is likely to be very meagre. The announcement that 25,000 parts were available sounds alright until one realizes the immense number actually carried in stock by the different companies in the central warehouses and on dealers shelves throughout the province. The number and variety of parts carried is important because this together with rapid and efficient service is very necessary in the repair business. It is even more important than a few cents saved in paying in price for parts may mean a loss equalling many times the value of the part required.

The statement that the government is trying to lower the cost of production of farmers by going into the machinery business sounds very nice until one considers the size and intricacies of that business. There are quite a number of machine companies all with elaborate plants to turn out different articles. These plants, some of them very large, have been built up over quite a number of years and employ among their technical, executive and distributing staffs, experience only to be gained with the passing of time. This is the source of the supply with the possible exception of a few minor parts companies, the large companies control the repair parts field. And they can distribute parts any way they like. At present there is an elaborate network of distributing depots, which in turn serve country town dealers. The business is linked up with the new machinery business and it does not seem likely that the larger companies will upset their organizations in favor of government dealings.

The lowering of the cost of production on the farm, via the sale of repair parts, can only be done when parts can be supplied:

At considerably less cost; quicker; more accurately; and more conveniently. To do this without the forced or voluntary co-operation of the larger machinery companies is going to be quite a problem. At present they hold this position fairly

CREDIT

"CREDIT supports the borrower as the rope supports the hanged" said Louis XIV in the seventeenth century when he saw another people had fallen into the hands of the usurers. Were he to return to our so-called civilization, and progress of the twentieth century he would be amazed to find the masses of our people still enslaved by debt. He would find a world in which credit has become a distinct curse as well as a dire necessity.

The average man has in the past and no doubt will in the future find it necessary to seek credit at some time, if not many times, in his life.

But unless that same average man wishes to use it as a rope to hang himself, as did the seventeenth century French peasants, he must seek to use it intelligently and to his ultimate advantage. —Comox District Free Press.

"HAPPY DAYS"?

On May 29. the Imperial Japanese headquarters announced that an estimated 2,700,000 Chinese had been killed or wounded in the "China incident." No less than 936,345 dead bodies of Chinese, it was stated, had been counted on battlefields.

In the recent issue of the Japan Times Weekly we find this: "We don't know how the song "Happy Days Are Here Again' sounds in Chinese, but the Chinese certainly must be singing it now, with peace and a new life on their doorsteps."—New York Post

How To Prepare 4 to 5 Pound Roasters

In the preparation of medium weight roasters (4 to 5 lb.), it is desirable they be fed heavily from the start to be to keep them to an good condition as possible at all stages of their growth. When they have reached about three pounds in weight they should be confined and fed a fattening ration, advice officials of the Poultry Division, Marketing Service, Dominion Department of Agriculture.

While crate feeding is desirable, in the general rush of farm work in the summer time and in view of lack of time and help probably give equally high results if the birds are confined either in a coop unit, building or in a colony house or range shelter pened in a small shady yard free from grass, sand, and fed a fattening mash.

The birds during the finishing stage should not have access to grass food or any kind owing to the fact that feed mixtures are relished with any of other common grains such as wheat, barley or oats, the whole of to a better with milk and fed in troughs, just what they will clean up three times a day.

Some poultrymen may prefer to make a dry mash by using milk powder in place of liquid milk and keeping it before the flock all the time, but for finishing it is usually found more satisfactory to wet feed the mash to a crumbly materials, and the last couple of weeks of birds 3 per cent tallow or other fat to the ration rather than keep the dry feed constantly before the flock.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By H. G. L. Strange, Director "The Crop Testing Plan."

Weeds, it has been found by scientific experiments, are one of the most important factors in delaying the census. When growing amidst the grain, weeds retard, it is calculated on the average, on these prairies, about 28 per cent of the practices and limited moisture available to the farmers' wheat and other crops, and as, of course, the crops produce about 25 per cent less yield than they would do had not the weeds been present.

Because of the generous rainfall this year, weeds are growing most luxuriantly and so prairie farmers now have a splendid opportunity that may not occur again for many years, to get rid of vast quantities of them.

The best way to kill weeds is to encourage them to germinate and to grow, and then as they appear above the ground to destroy them.

A light cultivation on stubble as soon as the present grain crop is harvested will cause vast quantities of weeds to develop. The winter will kill many of the young weeds, while the early cultivation next spring will destroy additional vast hosts of them.

Wild oat plants, however, should not be cultivated until they are several inches high, but before any joining of the stem has occurred.

The first load of wheat from 1939 crop was delivered to the Alberta Pool Elevator at Fernie Springs and graded No. One Red Winter. The wheat was harvested from the farm of Henry Neufeldt and weighed 62 pounds to the bushel.

Port Arthur Terminal Elevator Purchased

The Alberta Wheat Pool has purchased the Union Terminal at Port Arthur, which has a capacity of two million bushels. Announcement of the transaction was made by Lew Hutchinson, chairman of the board of directors, to Alberta Pool delegates this week.

Mr. Hutchinson explained that while the Alberta Pool owned a five million bushel terminal at Vancouver and diverted all possible bookings to the west coast, there was always substantial volume of grain moving eastward. In view of the unfavorable rail conditions from Pacific ports, particularly over the past three years, the volume of eastbound grain had increased.

Up to the present the Alberta Pool has been using the terminal facilities of the Manitoba and Saskatchewan Pools at the head of the Lakes. It was possible to do this with under coverage crops in the west, but with anything like normal crop conditions the terminal facilities controlled by others were inadequate to take care of the volume of eastern shipments. An arrangement has been made

And this one stayed at home. Well, sometimes it did and sometimes it didn't. You see, a farmer might have inserted a classified ad "pigs for sale", and then Mr. Pig or Messrs. Piggies would simply have a change of home. Many farmers who have one or other kind of livestock for sale make use of classified ads to let other farmers know of it. Classified ads are cheap, effective, and cover a wide range. Implsments, hay, greenfeed or grain in fact almost any used saleable article can often be sold by meanns of the humble "classified." Classified ads "produce" things unless they're overdone. Somebody wanting something simply say so through the medium of a classified, and presto, somebody bobs up with just the wanted article for sale.

First a new $6,000 school house is being built, the full size basement is finished and the wall is nearing completion. Mr. Smith from Manitoba has the contract and with his family they are living in the old school house so consequently there has been no church services for several Sundays. The Ladies Aid were hoping to buy the old school house and remodel it into a church, but we understand it will be moved to Lindbrook to be used for a high school.

LINDBROOK

Mrs. Jos. Brzeszpitko and girls spent a week at a cottage at South Cooking Lake.

Mrs. J. Bailey and family also two girlfriend there too, that is her Mother who has let her keep the home from burning, likewise Mr. Brzeszpitko.

Lindbrook district so far has been lucky enough to escape any serious hail damage, although we hear that the N.E. corner of the district did get hit rather badly. We are all sorry to hear of the losses by hail of some of our friends of the surrounding districts.

Mr A. Scott had the misfortune to possess a steer with a suicidal complex. It tried to stop a train and the train won. Exit steer!

That's the stuff, A.B.C. If you can only get to sleep, we of the "Old Brigade" are "Ready aye Ready!"

Haying is well under way now and soon the bonders will be busy and the fall "Fainess" is on. It would be a hazardous guess to say how the crops will turn out here, but from all we've heard, they compare favorably with other districts.

Mrs. Jos. Brzeszpitko left for the Old Country on the Empress of Britain and word has been received since that she is staying home with relatives.

Glad to welcome Mrs. F. Bowne home from the hospital, where she underwent an operation which we are pleased to hear proved of great benefit.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Kertzman and sons of Lindbrook, returned home from the agricultural school at Vermilion where he put in a very happy and instructive week. He won a scholarship at the school fair that entitled him to a term at this school and he reports a wonderful time. Let's hope you get another, Richard.

Late News—Word has been received that Senor Prosper of Lindbrook, had the misfortune to break her arm near the school on Monday night as she was riding a horse when the animal shied and threw her to the ground.

FIRE SIREN SHRIEKS TWICE IN ONE WEEK

Two fire sirenes in one week is unusual for Tofield. On Friday of last week a grass fire occurred near the little section which for a time assumed dangerous proportions. An alarm was sent in and the town rounded. The fire brigade made a quick get-a-way, but no damage was done to property.

On Wednesday at about 11:30 the alarm was sounded once more, this time the potential fire being at the F. McHaffey home. Some of the fearless citizens observed smoke coming out of the kitchen, investigated, found no one at home and turned in the alarm. Fortunately it was nothing worse than some food that had been temporarily forgotten on the stove but which was causing a lot of smoke. No great amount of damage was done.

The practical usefulness of the siren for alarm was on as previous occasions, forcibly demonstrated. On Friday, particularly, the brigade's get-a-way was quite smart. On Tuesday, the alarm coming as close to 12 noon, many were in doubt whether it was a fire alarm or the regular 12 noon siren.

On Tuesday's run a trio of the fire truck cases did the run was combined on the run. A new truck wouldn't come amiss.

Watch a.m. all are cordially invited to attend.

Miss Henderson a former teacher at Tofield but now of Spirit River visited a week at the W. A. Mitchell and Mrs. Henderson home.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Yeomie, daughter Mabel and son Jack, Mr. and Mrs. Dr Morrison and son all of Edmonton were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Mitchell.

"I understand that you called on the complainant. Is that so?" demanded a fore-bearing lawyer of a man he was cross-examining in an English court.

"Yes," replied the witness.

"What did he say?"

Council for the other side eagerly objected that evidence as to a conversation was not admissable, and half an hour's argument ensued. Then the two magistrates retired to consider the point, returned and in their return, some time later that they had decided the answer was proper.

"Well, what did the plaintiff say?" repeated the cross examining barrister.

"He weren't at home, sir," was the answer.

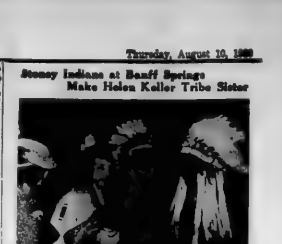
Stoney Indians at Banff Springs Make Helen Keller Tribe Sister



Helen Keller, blind and deaf authoress and lecturer, and who through her sensitive fingertips sees and hears, was recently honored with a membership in the Stoney tribe. The colorful initiation ceremonies took place at Banff Springs Hotel, Banff, Alberta, during the Annual Indian Days sponsored by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The illustration shows Miss Keller receiving a heavy mane feather, the insignia of her Indian name "White Eagle Following" from the hands of Chief Walking Buffalo. Chief Jacob Two-Young-Man looks on while Polly Thomson, Miss Keller's constant companion, "interprets" for her blind friend.

Cornhill Council Deal With Run-o'-the-Mill Problems

A regular meeting of the Municipal District of Cornhill Council was held at the District's Office Tofield on Friday, August 11th.

There were present Reeve Walker in the chair, Councillors Anderson, Coombes, Holmberg, Kertzman and Bunbay.

Minutes of previous meeting together with list of accounts passed for payment were read and upon motion approved.

Mr. T. Jones interviewed Council regarding his taxes. He had considered in 1934, but his application had been cancelled. He was now under the Farmers Credit Arrangement Act and had been paying his current taxes regularly, but due to the arrears was unable to take advantage of the discounts. He would like to take advantage of the discounts. It was suggested that he come in and have secretary fix him up with the consolidation agreement.

Mr. C. Lindgren interviewed Council re N.W. 11-51-20. He purchased this quarter in December 1937 for the taxes then outstanding against it, viz. $406.50. He paid $200.00 and has paid current taxes since. Pending on the revision of the assessment up since 1927. He also desired title to the timber, fifteen acres of which having been held out. There was a question whether having purchased the quarter in 1937 for the taxes an amount of taxes then outstanding against it whether it was fair to charge him with accrued penalties. Council dealt with the matter in 1933 but he had not carried out the agreement. It was decided that secretary look up the records and report to the next meeting.

The monthly financial statement was presented also an interim financial statement from January to July 31st. The secretary was instructed to bring to council upon the preparation of the statements, they being voucher and audit authorized.

Mr. T. O. Stinson interviewed Council regarding tax collections. After considerable discussion it was decided to appoint Mr. Stinson as tax collector on the following basis. The secretary is to furnish Mr. Stinson with a list of taxes to be collected. Mr. Stinson will endeavor to collect by letter, but making trips when necessary. The collector to be allowed a commission of ten per cent on arrears collected through him in 1939. The municipality to supply postage and stationery but no salary to be allowed for trips.

Advances for lunch. Rescinding—

A service report on the diesel tractor used on the big grader was read. The report was furnished by the Union Tractor and Harvester Co.

A letter from the Dept. of Agriculture re weeds on highway was read. The together with other written and verbal reports of weeds created a discussion on the weed problem. The worst infestation appeared to be around lakes, then this land is most times being under control of Dept. of Lands and Mines. It was suggested that a petition be circulated through the municipality asking the Dept. of Lands and Mines to take care of weeds on the lakeshores. This suggestion was dropped in favor of a formal resolution!

Moved by Councillor Anderson, that the Municipal Council of Cornhill No. 457 do strongly want to impress on the Department of Lands and Mines the urgent need of attention being given to the weed problem on the lake shores which are polluted with Canada and sow thistle and have become a sources of menace to our agriculturalists who are shunned at the speed these weeds are being spread.—Carried.

Mr. Lang of the Union Tractor and Harvester Co. interviewed Council. He referred to the report which their service man had made. The report showed that piston were badly worn and needed bullding up. He stated that they would build up pistons on location for $125.00. A portable welding outfit would go out and do the work.

It was mentioned by Council that the motor was not developing the power it should and that it was using far too much oil. Mr. Lang said that a definite statement could not be given regarding this without taking the engine head off. It may be that the rings were worn or stuck, in either case they would have to be replaced as stuck rings from dioxide were generally broken putting them loose. He explained the compression on a

RAINFALL SCANTY FOR GROWING SEASON

During the growing season, through the courtesy of the Scarlet Grain Co. the Mercury has been able to keep its readers informed as to the amount of moisture falling in this district. Also this year's rainfall in relation to the previous year and long time average. This week we publish the final report for the season.

It will be noted from the figures that to regards rainfall the has been a very peculiar season. Starting out with copious rains, by the end of June we were two inches ahead of last year. From July 1st on however, lack of precipitation caused a gradual reversal of this condition, and by August 15th, the official end of the growing season, this year's rainfall was over two inches less than last year, and exactly three inches less than the long time average.

THE FIFTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS

Barry Haveril grew, hunting for a cousin of his, Jane Conroy, known as the Laredo Kid, who murdered his brother, Robert. Barry is befriended by Judge Blue and his daughter Lucy. Judge tells him of Jane's flight to Laredo, and Barry, after a hurry escapes, however, and meets an old man named Timberline, who also is pursuing for the Laredo Kid. After several years of searching Barry returns to Judge Blue's house, where he meets a man called Tom Haverill whom he assumes of being his cousin Jane. A duggout. Barry becomes convinced of his error later and they have a gun battle in which each is wounded. Barry, however, Barry does not. Tom Haveril has married Lucy, and after a gun battle with Haveril's men, takes her to his cabin in the mountains. There he finds the real Laredo Kid wounded and dying.

Sardow had brought in a small pack of food. Lucy wouldn't eat; Barry merely shook his head at it. So Sardow ate a few bites alone and lay down in a corner beyond the fireplace and went to sleep. Lucy, on her elbows, looked at Barry kneeling by the chimney.

"There was something you were going to tell me," she reminded him.

He looked at her blankly. Then: "It's late and you've done in. Better go to sleep, hadn't you?"

"Sleep! Without knowing what it was that you said you could explain. You said I wasn't Lucy Blue at all—"

"I know how you feel." His own mind had been groping; there were questions he wanted answered before he could think of sleep.

His sombre eyes trailed back to the man on the bunk; for a time he forgot Lucy and his promise to tell her what he could of the amazing thing now concerning herself.

"If there was a single word of truth in what you told me—" said Lucy.

He looked at her absently, then nodded and went out. Returning he took, as of other members of his household, the Colonel's scarf and two servants.

There was another picture. It was of a little girl five or six years old, the Colonel's daughter. First it was page—the thought that she too had been murdered. But her tiny body was never found.

"Yes," said Barry. "Doesn't look much like you now, does it? But it's the same little girl that you were in these first pictures the Judge took. Going straight through the park—well, you've got pretty good proof enough for me, Jerry on earth, that if you're Lucy anybody you are Lucy Hamilton and not Lucy Blue."

"But the little girl—you—" Lucy must have been carried off by the man or men who killed her parents."

"But why?" demanded Lucy.

"Who was the Colonel's heiress; it was supposed that she would inherit seen that she was a very valuable when she was captured. It would seem that she was a very valuable piece of property!"

"You mean that my—that Judge Blue—"

"You're surely the girl in that paper, and you told me that night at Tyler-ville when you overheard the stabbing the Judge and Laredo alike—"

"And Laredo said he would marry me, but he would wait a few years," she said. "Nine eighteen or nineteen, I forget which—"

"And the Judge had this box, paper and picture in his safe. Don't you see it. That's where Laredo got in on the secret somehow—maybe by force—and the Judge was afraid of Laredo because of what he knew and could tell—"

"It's horrible!" She put her face in her hands and shuddered.

"Then," Barry went on, puzzled by his turn, "with Laredo feeling safe while he's hunting his own trail of Calderone and back again, Tom Haverill rides into Judge Blue's ranch. Tom Haverill has this little box—and Tom Haverill marries you!"

"I'm afraid!"

"You!" said Barry sternly. "Look here, I want you to take you back to Tom Haverill, knowing that I'd made a mistake about him being Laredo. But how did it come that he had this box and the things in it, that he knew about him being Laredo? Am I going to take you back to him that sort of thing?"

She looked at him strangely, afraid for him too, yet probing wistfully, hoping a little, oh, and really afraid.

"Barry! Oh are you the same Barry of Gale in Tylersville's days? You were so true and honest then; I knew you—"

"You should know that I'm honest and square with you, Lucy. Why girl, you can tell! Here I am, and lying to you or telling you the truth—can't you tell?"

"Can you, Barry?" A faint, infinitely sad smile that might have been soothing but a play of shadow touched her lips. "Tonight, when I came to here. We'll be seeing you, I thought—I have told you I meant to help you. Was I lying then?"

Barry stood looking at her a long while. "I've been thinking about that. You did seem to mean it, and your side of that I don't know how we could ever have got away, Sardow and I. And I thought of something else. You know when I told you we were going where Sardow was, that Tom Haverill's men would be there before us—"

"But—"

"Yes, I know. You couldn't tell me that, but you did do all that you could to keep me from going there, I remember, Lucy."

"And now you do know that I was telling you the truth?"

"Yes. You gave me every chance you could Lucy." For no instant his eyes flashed up, then he answered bravely: "I'm grateful to you, Lucy, but I'm almost sorry. You see, it just makes me love you all the more, and I guess it would be better for me if I could hate you instead. You're Tom Haverill's now—and Tom Haveril is'nt Laredo—and I'm no longer any enemy to you and kill him—"

Lucy said: "Are you crazy, Barry Haverill? You know I'm married to Tom; no matter who he was, could you think I'd—I'd marry a man who killed him?"

"Of course I couldn't. I didn't ever think of it that way; I didn't get that far." He made a weary gesture of a head across his eyes.

"What are you going to do. We can't do anything tonight; it's too late and you're worn out. Get some sleep if you can. Maybe by morning things will be clearer."

Barry looked up and their eyes met.

"It'll hell, that's all" he said heavily. "I love you so, Lucy—and I haven't any right."

She plunged into her newspaper again, reading every line. Later she dozed, dreaming fantastic dreams and started wide awake to find Barry page—the

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By H. G. L. Strange, Director "The Crop Testing Plan."

The price of wheat, the records show, is today lower than it has been since the year 1894, when it was equivalent to about 36 cents a bushel at Liverpool.

The present low price is the direct result of the wheat surplus today existing in the world.

How much is the surplus? The world produces and consumes, each year, approximately 5,400 million bushels of wheat. The businessmen or the unwanted surplus today, it is calculated, is not more than about 350 million bushels, or no more than sufficient to furnish the people of the whole nation going world with about 27 days supply.

Surpluses equal to this per person in the world, have appeared in the past, and always people were astonished to find how quickly the surpluses, that many thought would endure for years, have disappeared. The one supposed that there would be surpluses, and that this present surplus would be quickly consumed, so that people think possible, is that while the total amount in bushels seems large, actually it only fills the world's needs for very few days.

Actually the world's consumption of crops in any large country, therefore, would soon make all these extra surplus bushels indispensable.

Five still bleating, Barry still brooded over at the table.

She was dozing again and it was almost dawn. Barry was just going to the door, meaning to saddle the horses, when they heard the cook-boy, somehow escaped from Sardow, gurgle drowsily to the ambie door.

At the door he stood quiet in one side and asked curtly:

"Who? Who's out there?"

"That you Sundown?" came an excited, Pigh-pitched voice.

"It's good old Sundown!" Barry said to Lucy, and opened the door. "What's happened, Sundown?" as demanded Barry, getting the door shut.

"A plowy," said Timberline, "We're on the trail of him. Can't help us, that's what."

"What's 'Tex' and who's 'They'?" demands' sherry. "You say 'We're in the run. Who? And what's after you?"

"You ask who's on the run; well I'll tell you, Barry, and Sundown! Ask Ranch Haverill has got a bullet through his leg and another in his shoulder. He's never's a middle ach did even his wife Ken Marsh has got a bullet through one big and one small toe. Ken Marsh's wife's a middle ach. How did it, Sheeks, you ain't, Tom Tom Haveril an' the ol' Judge an' a couple of their varmints."

Timberline added a second time of Sardow and the form on the bunk. "Who's in with fellers, anyway?"

Barry said: "This is Sardow. He's a friend of mine now, Timber—a and now for stirring crops or some thing—go take a good look at him."

"It ain't—it ain't Laredo, is it, Sundown?"

"Yes," said Barry. "That's good. Can go to bed. We'll be moving."

When Barry and Timberline joined them, they have the unconscious Jane Conroy — Laredo — in their arms, wrapped in a blanket. Barry said: "Lucy, Lucy! help me. I'll get the ride along, and take Lucy with you. She'll be better off with you than anywhere else for a few days; anyhow she knows, which way to turn. It's about sixty miles on to Pa's place. I guess the house is still standing, Timber and I'll join you later. One or the other of us will ride in on to-morrow."

The three rode off through the pines.

"How, which a-way?" asked Timberline irritably.

You think that they'll be able to find my hide-out here," said Barry. "I don't. Just the same, we'll move off some the mountain side a bit to a sheltered place where we can hide up. We can keep an eye on the trail and a day. If they don't show up before dark, we'll move back into it."

So the three then carried the half dead Laredo Kid the half mile to the place Barry had in mind.

Sardow was forever going to stand and look at Jane Conroy and coming back to Barry to look at him dumbly and pleading as a dog looks at its master.

"This boy's crazy to tell you something, Sundown," said Timber.

Half way through the next day Timberline admitted: "Well, I reckon you was right for once, Sundown; that skulduggery bunch a' hell, hasn't lost our track." He ruminated, then added, grown suddenly wrathful, "Fah'ye talkin' it layin' down, are you?"

Barry cocked up his eyebrows. "Talking what?"

"They're chased us out, hilt Jane, stole our gold mine, an' yeh ain't said a word. How about it?"

"We'll straighten that out," returned Barry coolly.

They decided there was no need

Salt

Pare and remove the centres of the turnips, leaving a cup one-half inch in thickness. Cook shells in boiling water until tender. Just before cooking is completed, add the salt. Cook the centres in the same way and use for stirring crops or saving as mashed turnips.

The turnip may be used as soup, for creamed or buttered peas, beets, carrots, or any suitable vegetable.

BREAD CONSUMPTION IN FRANCE

It would seem to be a far cry from pallitics to bread, but when the French government decided to raise the internal price of wheat substantially, and thereby brought about dearer bread, they did not expect to find the population deserting this staple food and increasing their consumption of rice, vegetables, potatoes, fruit etc. It is admitted that good bread demands a reasonable portion of strong wheat in the blend from which the flour is milled. French millers are constrained to use home wheat, and they experience the greatest difficulty obtaining strong wheat; the consequence is that the bread from French miller's fleur is, according to the leading French journals, unpalatable, flat, and indigestible.

The fall in the consumption of bread in France is said to be due principally to the poor quality, which in turn is due to the flood of some, sonic nationalists that Chestons to encourage the wheats of Algeria. When such nation shuts out the finest and most nutrious strong wheats that they export wheat blends, then the only thing that can happen is a falling consumption and malnutrition.

Fortunately, we in this country have come to a beautiful supply of the finest strong wheat in the world; but much is going to depend on how we are not free from danger in that our millers refuse to make use he genuine flour content of the strongest wheat. This again is an economic danger over shadowing. Only in the United Kingdom is demanded not only by the people, but is also favored by the governments. Such a law acts a limit on the procentage of strong wheat which may be used in the flour, and the tendency to do without strong wheat as far as reasonably possible. The world seems determined to beggar itself, and this in spite of the obvious folly! It seems hopeless-ly stupid.—British Baker.

JUST A SCRATCH!

Edmonton:—"Oh it's nothing, just a scratch ....."

Bet "just a scratch" and compare, the cruel cuts and lacerations were a heavy item last year for organizations that pay compensation to employees, says the Alberta Safety League.

The 1939 edition of Accident Facts, the National Safety Council's statistical yearbook, has:

One out of last compensable occupational injuries came from infection. Many of these cases begin as small scratches or lacerations that would have resulted in no disability if proper medical treatment had been given promptly.

This Little Pig Went To Market

And this one stayed at home. Well, sometimes it did and sometimes it didn't. You see, a farmer might have inserted a classified ad "pigs for sale", and then Mr. Pig or Messrs. Piggies would simply have a change of home. Many farmers who have pigs or other kinds of livestock for sale make use of classified ads to let other farmers know of it. Classified ads are cheap, effective, and serve a wide range. Implements, hay, greenfeed or grain in fact almost any used saleable article can often be sold by meanns of the humble "classified." Classified ads "produce" things sometimes too. Somebody wanting something simply say so through the medium of a classified, and presto, somebody bobs up with just the wanted article for sale.

TAXES—

THE APPOINTMENT of a tax collector by the Municipal District of Cornhill Council raises up the general question of taxation and the payment of taxes. Few people like to pay taxes, yet all people in some form or other do, and the original coiner of the phrase "as sure as death and taxes," certainly coined a phrase which cannot be disputed. To owners of property particularly, the payment of taxes is either a penalty or privilege, depending upon the viewpoint of the individual concerned. If he considers himself an individual human unit upon whom fate has bestowed the ownership of a piece of property, with no sense of responsibility to others who own property or to the thousands who do not, tren the payment of taxes would no doubt be irksome ano thought of as a penalty. If however, the owner of property considers that one of hundreds of humans he has been given the opportunity to acquire property, and because of this feels a sense of responsibility to those who do not, the payment of taxes can easily be considered a privilege. But whatever the view point taken, to the owner of property taxes are sure and generally have to be paid in hard earned money—with a smile or a grimmace as the case may be.

To the owner of property taxes are very real, so real in fact, that if the owner considers the property of value to him or deriving any pleasure from owning it, taxes are the very first obligation he should endeavor to pay. The reason for this is very obvious when one considers that taxes are in effect a legal levy against the property itself and if after a time the yearly levies remain unpaid the property may become owned by the authorities making the levy, or in other words imposing the tax.

Unfortunately for the taxing authority concerned this year especially so for the property owners, many do not realize the importance of keeping their taxes paid up, or of taking advantage of every discount that can be obtained. It is true that of late years the value of many thousands of property owners been impossible to keep abreast of the tax levy, but the fact remains that after necessary living expenses have been arranged for, taxes should be the first consideration.

Generally speaking tax gathering authorities like town, village and municipal councils are soft hearted. The councils like an exception, perhaps it is, but we have never come across a school board, town, village or rural council yet that derived any pleasure from taking title to any persons property or making a seizure. On the contrary it is with extreme reluctance that property is placed on the tax sale list, and it is only done when the law demands it. What the average council desires is full time co-operation of its ratepayers. Like provincial governments and to a large extent all governments councils produce nothing. It is the ratepayers who do the producing. Councils merely perform a necessary function of government and they can only do this with maximum efficiency when they are accorded the full time co-operation of the ratepayers. Mo: councils are willing to give a full account of their expenditures and all councils are to a large degree compelled to do so. The ratepayers are informed No council deliberately offends any of its ratepayers, on the contrary they try as far as humanly possible to please all.

The prompt payment of taxes is one phase of full time co-operation. It is also helpful to the ratepayers themselves. Under existing conditions tax levies are high and the cost of what experience has taught them they can expect to collect. If councils were sure of collecting all or nearly all the taxes levied, the levy need not be so high. It is true that providing ratepayers are dealing with a wise council, prompt payment of taxes tends to lower taxes, and conversely, deferred payments tends to raise them.

One of the peculiar features of paying taxes is that apparently the public willingly pays hidden taxes but seems reluctant to pay unhidden ones. There are very numerous illustrations which could be quoted but one or two is sufficient. At the present moment the writer is smoking a cigarette (nothing to boast about) yet we know at least half of the money paid for the cigarette constitute a federal tax. And just imagine if you can, the number of cigarettes smoked in a day in Canada. Every day we see cars driving here, there and everywhere, using gasolene for fuel, and a goodly percentage of the cost is composed of provincial taxation. And there is the Dominion Sales Tax resting on everything we buy. Yet one hears very little complaint concerning these hidden taxes and as regards them there is no such thing as arrears.

A lady had advertised for a girl for general housework and was showing the applicant over the house. She had been very liberal in her promises of privileges—afternoons off, and so on—and it looked as though the two were about to come to some agreement, when the girl suddenly asked: "Do you do your own stretchin'?"

"Do we do our own what?" asked the puzzled mistress.

"Stretchin'," repeated the new girl.

"I don't understand."

"Stretchin'," repeated the girl a second time. "Do you put all the food on the table at dinner and stretch for it, or do I have to shuffle it around?"—Wall Street Journal.

The Week in Edmonton

Edmonton, August 14—His Excellency the Governor-General, long known as an expert fly fisherman, sampled the delights of Alberta's mountain pools Saturday, when he cast his rod over a solitary mountain lake out of Jasper. On the previous day Lord Tweedsmuir visited the Columbia ice field, that aye-inspiring birthplace of great rivers that leaves the outdoor breathless and speechless on first view.

Thus Alberta's mountain playground was more than fame—the Royal Visit of Their Majesties the King and Queen having focussed world attention on these and other Alberta vacation spots. The worth of the province in this regard is speedily becoming known throughout Canada and North America, as the tourist centres of the season show. Indeed, so great has been the increase this year, it would seem that, at last, Alberta is about to receive a bigger share of the tourist business which has hitherto been the case.

The tourist trade is Big Business. But last year, Alberta received only $9,217,000 out of a Canadian total of over $200,000,000—and that is bad business. Actually, the city of Vancouver did 33 times the retail business of Alberta during 1938, according to reliable authorities. This year, however, due to the building up of highways, and better advertising methods, the percentage of the province's share is bound to increase.

*****

Indeed everything seems to have mixed farming, oil and coal and gas as well as the manufacture of crops is some parts of the province during the tw., weeks prior to the announcement of the annual "war alarums", the matter has been of world serious losses may result from crop damage due to shrivelling or underfilling of kernels.

Building in Edmonton continues to maintain a high mark for the first few months of April, May, June and July, totalling $3,391 more than recorded, is a good basis for the belief that 1940 will be a peak year in the trade.

Jasper, too, has shown an increase. Up to August 9, the total entering the park gates in the total obtained at June 30 the total stood at 64,000, with Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg in the lead.

At Waterton a total of 18,726 cars registered—an increase of 5,616 over and 10,561 visitors over the 1938 figures. Due to the great influx of United States cars during the month of August, it is confidently anticipated that the end-of-season figures will raise the totals considerably.

*****

With a view to keeping a check on the trade, arrangements have been made to work out a proper compilation of the tourist figures—data relating to cars, passengers, and points of origin—and these will be released in due course.

A reminder of the importance of the tourist trade—American tourists in Ontario last summer left behind them hard cash to the tune of $117,000,000—while the value of the whole Western wheat crop was only $170,000,000. The comparison, so far as Alberta was concerned, is certainly odious.

The Calgary Herald recently summed up the situation editorially in the following words: "The business of attracting visitors should be important to Albertans. It should be no important as oil or wheat, because if Alberta is going to grow and become a big city and industrial centre wants it to be, we will have to develop a more varied economy

Some days earlier, on his return from a southern inspection tour, Mr. Aberhart had stated that the irrigation activities might be suspended in the Brooks area. "Without irrigation there would be no crop," said the Minister.

Belief that police have smoothed what appears to be widespread unionization rocket is entertained in Edmonton where Mr. Justice Tweedie appeared at a hearing as a witness against a defendant charged with perjury. It is said that nearly 50 persons will be charged with perjury as less offenses concerned with the illegal obtaining of naturalization papers. A ring is suspected.

POLICE CHECK ON RECKLESS DRIVERS

War on the reckless driver has been declared by the R.C.M.P.

With main highway surfacing extended in various parts of the province, there has been an increased tendency to speed, thus aggravating the traffic problems.

Now, according to officials of the Alberta Motor Association, police are taking definite action to curb dangerous driving. Recently there have been many reports of police checking up cars which were violating the law through not having proper head or tail lights, or were contravening regulations in other respects.

Safety on the highways is strongly advocated by the A.M.A., which has given full support to local efforts designed to lower the accident toll in this province.

In the interests of all who use the main highways with full regard to the requirements of safety, the movement is one that all motorists should support in every way possible. Careful driving in this province will receive the hearty support of all fair-minded citizens.

Closing words: "The business of attracting visitors should be important to Albertans. It should be no important as oil or wheat, because if Alberta is going to grow and become a big city and industrial centre wants it to be, we will have to develop a more varied economy"

PRUNING SHADE TREES

(Experimental Farm News)

Trees in the prairie shelter belt are allowed to grow naturally. Trees used for shade on grounds, driveways or streets usually require pruning, depending upon kind of trees and their location, states C. D. Mathews Superintendent Dominion Experimental Farm, Saskatchewan.

Too much attention to any one branch will result in the autumn appearance of the tree having been "pruned" by the wind. Pruning off here or there, or a portion of the tree to balance the tree, will only make matters worse. Without irregularities in the branches the tree will be removed closer to the trunk and better shape. In pruning trees a good and sturdy centre growth must be maintained. Desired shape and filling can usually be obtained by pruning branches back to a bud pointing in the desired direction. Protection of wounds made on the trees by pruning is always desirable. Shellac should be brushed on as soon as possible, before any disinfectant or watertight material is applied. A suitable coating is a thick mixture of white lead and linseed oil, shaded to match the colour of the bark.

dered tractor engine was over 700 lbs. per square inch when it left the factory whereas the compression of gasoline engines rarely exceed 100 lbs. per square inch. Building up the piston and putting in new sleeves, rings and pistons would cost approximately $300.00. The work could be done on location. Council discussed the matter at considerable length hearing in mind the heavy consumption of oil and the fact that lessened power meant lowered production and higher costs. There was some question whether the work should be done now or at the end of the season but unanimous as the work had to be done some time, Council felt they should lower away now. On motion of Couns. Hulmberg it was decided to have Union Tractor and Harvester Co. build up the piston on tractor and put engine in good condition.

LINDEBOOK

The last two containing is coming week omens amongst the farmers here. The grain men fear for the yield and quality of their grain, the stock men, dairymen and sheperds because the dried up pastures, and scanty hay crop and on farms where there are many animals needing water the problem of providing same is becoming acute, some of the wells are beginning to fail also.

The sympathy of the Lindbrook folk is extended to Mrs. Janet and daughter Alberta on the death of husband and father, Mr Leon Janet. Mr. Janet was an old timer here and well known and liked by all who knew him.

A mild bulling beam seems to have hit Lindbrook lately. Mr. G. Braaten having built a new house; Mr. Lotzen remodelled his house and now they've hauled the old Ketchamoot School Building, which was condemned, up here to do duty again as a high school. There must also be other buildings going to be the "truly rustic log edifice" do not class in a home.

Miss Elenn Bost of Athabasca is here on a visit to her aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Bost's home here.

Rev. Mr. Tempe preached his farewell sermon here to his Lindbrook congregation last Sunday week. There was quite a number present as Rev. Tempe is going to England where he will be engaged in church work and it looks like as if he had stepped right into a hornets nest which it certainly will be if Hitler doesn't behave himself. We hope however that he will have a peaceful, happy life over in the Old Land.

Things have been rather quiet around here lately. Most of the young men of this district are away harvesting, either down south or in Saskatchewan. The crops around here, although not of big acreage, are reported as being dandy ones.

Mr Bill Donald and Mr Fred Donald have finished putting a new floor in the school house and have put on a new door. Now all that remains to be done is for the ladies to hang up the new curtains and our little old schoolhouse will be all ready to welcome back the children in less than two weeks time. Not that the children will welcome that.

The Winona Club held a successful meeting at Mrs. A Donald's last Thursday. Plans were discussed for a bazaar and supper to be held later in the fall. Mrs Kortzenan of Lindbrook was a visitor. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. W Fontaine on September 21st.

SYNOPSIS

Barry Haverill goes hunting for a cousin of his, Jesse Conroy, known as the Laredo Kid, who mysteriously left his brother, Robert. Barry is befriended by Judge Bliss and his daughter Mary. The Judge's term ends and he is defeated by Conroy, a local actor. Barry encounters Conroy, and meets an old man named Timberline, who also is gunning for the Laredo Kid. After several years of searching, Barry returns to Judge Bliss's house, where he meets a man called Tom Haverill whom he accuses of being Lip cousin Jesse in disguise. Barry becomes convinced of this later and they have a gun battle, both getting hurt. Recovered, Barry discovers Tom Haverill has married Lucy, and after a gun battle with Haverill's men, takes her to his cabin in the mountains. There he finds the real Laredo Kid wounded and dying.

Chapter XIII. They Lucy became able to walk the house from the window one day, and came on back if he coast is clear.

"You had better go right away, Barry," said his mother.

"Of course you're right," Barry said. "I don't want to run out on you folks, but it's clear as day that my staying here now would only drag you all into it. Sure, I'll go. But there's something you're all forgetting—"

Lucy sprang to her feet. There were fire in her eyes, too; she stood quivering tense. He could not wait for Barry to finish. "I see," he said passionately.

"What about me? What am I to do?"

"That's what I was thinking of," muttered Barry.

"Don't you see?" demanded she girl. "It isn't only Barry they want. They are after me too!"

Lucy's eyes were brighter than ever and her face was aflame again when she made her hurried rejoinder.

I am not going back to—to anybody, until I know a lot of things, I—" She whirled to Barry. "Take me with you, Barry!"

"We couldn't let 'em take her, Barry," said his father. "Ma'mselle she wanted."

"But don't you see?" cried Lucy. "It would be the same as if Barry had stayed; they'd turn things upside down to get me—it's the Hamilton money they're after, I know it. Didn't they—didn't someone murder for a part of it long ago.?"

Barry caught her by the arm. He didn't speak to her, but he looked at Timberline.

"Get a couple of horses saddled up for me, will you, Link? We'll be getting ready to go.

A sigh escaped the girl. That was when, after a few minutes of riding, she experienced a sensation of re, let, of escape. At the same instant Barry spoke.

Barry said, "You know I love you, Lucy."

And Lucy, her voice hushed like the breath of night air through the pines, answered him with the same, "Do you, Barry?"

"And you, Lucy—down in your heart—"

"Don't Barry!"

Presently she said: "Barry, life is terrible, isn't it? It isn't fair! It doesn't give all of us a chance. If one only knew—"

"Why didn't I take you over with me that time from Tyborville?" he exclaimed bitterly.

She didn't answer, but in her heart she whispered despairingly, "Oh, why didn't you?"

"Tonight I am going to take you to Fat Humphrey's ranch," said Barry. "It's not long after that. We'll be four or an hour and a half—"

"Oh!" whispered Lucy, and reached out to catch his sleeve. "I hear someone coming!"

He, too, heard horses' hoofs on a bit of rocky trail in the distance, and a moment later three dozen yards ahead of them. They made their way through the trail when a dozen men were riding by. Two of these men were Judge Bliss and Tom Haverill.

The riders passed on.

When they drew near Tom Humphrey's cabin in his clearing among the pines, Barry said, "Wait here a minute; I'll go ahead and make sure it's all right," and swung down and left her holding his horse.

A slim little figure started up before him motor-training out of the blackest of shadows.

"Jesse! Say, you did come back to me!" and a soft voice murmuringly.

"Molly!" exclaimed Barry. It's you, isn't it, Molly?"

She drew back, poised for flight. "It is—Who are you?" She seemed frightened.

"I am Barry. Don't you remember Barry Haverill, Robert's brother?"

"Oh!" She gasped and the one spoke and drew still farther back from him.

"You thought I was Jesse," he said. "What Jesse? Who is the Jesse you asked for?"

Molly was trying to bite his hand but suddenly frees still.

"It's Jesse Conroy, isn't it?" Barry persisted, still gripping her now. "He's walking with him. And he is the man who murdered Robert."

"You did love Robert, didn't you, Molly?" he said gently.

She nodded miserably. She said faintly: "Barry, gone now. His ghost walks at night."

"And then Jesse Conroy came!"

"I was so sad," she said. "And Jesse was kind to me. Robert, don't hide. And—and—"

"And you loved him, too, Molly?"

She grew fierce, stamping passionately. "Not Tom tell me he killed Robert Gleb, and I knew. Then Jesse came Jesse asked me about Robert—and when I told him he laughed. And he is the man who murdered Robert."

Molly was trying to bite his hand but suddenly frees still.

"It's Jesse Conroy, isn't it?" Barry persisted, still gripping her now. "He's walking with him. And he is the man who murdered Robert."

"You did love Robert, didn't you, Molly?" he said gently.

She nodded miserably. She said faintly: "Barry, gone now. His ghost walks at night."

"And then Jesse Conroy came!"

"I was so sad," she said. "And Jesse was kind to me. Robert, don't hide. And—and—"

"And you loved him, too, Molly?"

She grew fierce, stamping passionately. "Not Tom tell me he killed Robert Gleb, and I knew. Then Jesse came Jesse asked me about Robert—and when I told him he laughed. And he is the man who murdered Robert."

"Don't you see?" demanded she girl. "It isn't only Barry they want. They are after me too!"

Lucy's eyes were brighter than ever and her face was aflame again when she made her hurried rejoinder.

I am not going back to—to anybody, until I know a lot of things. I—" She whirled to Barry. "Take me with you, Barry!"

"We couldn't let 'em take her, Barry," said his father. "Ma'mselle she wanted."

"But don't you see?" cried Lucy. "It would be the same as if Barry had stayed; they'd turn things upside down to get me—it's the Hamilton money they're after, I know it. Didn't they—didn't someone murder for a part of it long ago.?"

Barry caught her by the arm. He didn't speak to her, but he looked at Timberline.

"Get a couple of horses saddled up for me, will you, Link? We'll be getting ready to go.

A sigh escaped the girl. That was when, after a few minutes of riding, she experienced a sensation of re, let, of escape. At the same instant Barry spoke.

Barry said, "You know I love you, Lucy."

And Lucy, her voice hushed like the breath of night air through the pines, answered him with the same, "Do you, Barry?"

"And you, Lucy—down in your heart—"

"Don't Barry!"

Presently she said: "Barry, life is terrible, isn't it? It isn't fair! It doesn't give all of us a chance. If one only knew—"

"Why didn't I take you over with me that time from Tyborville?" he exclaimed bitterly.

She didn't answer, but in her heart she whispered despairingly, "Oh, why didn't you?"

"Tonight I am going to take you to Fat Humphrey's ranch," said Barry. "It's not long after that. We'll be four or an hour and a half—"

"Oh!" whispered Lucy, and reached out to catch his sleeve. "I hear someone coming!"

He, too, heard horses' hoofs on a bit of rocky trail in the distance, and a moment later three dozen yards ahead of them. They made their way through the trail when a dozen men were riding by. Two of these men were Judge Bliss and Tom Haverill.

The riders passed on.

When they drew near Tom Humphrey's cabin in his clearing among

CONTOL OF POULTRY EXTERNAL PARASITES

Though next to impossible to read external parasites in poultry during the summer months, as they may be introduced to the flock and promulgated by wild birds, these pests, red mites and lice are comparatively easy to detect and control. As dirty and unsanitary conditions are usually responsible for heavy infestation, the avoidance or removed of these agents may go far towards reducing the risk. Lice live entirely on the body of the bird, their eggs are laid at the base of the feathers, and they irritate by crawling and biting. Their favorite habitat is around the vent, head and under the wing where the skin is most tender. By using simple precautions the flock may be kept free and clean. The usual practice at the Dominion Experimental station, Lacombe, Ontario, station W. T. Reed feed Poultryman, is to examine the birds at intervals and if the presence of pests is detected to apply blue ointment, which can be bought at any drug store. A portion of the ointment about the size of a pea is rubbed into the skin, from whence buy prey upon the birds at night by spreading themselves with blood. This control is comparatively simple. A good and thorough clean-up of the premises and an application by spray or brus. of a mixture of one pound of crysylresol and one pint gal. ion of coal oil will be most effective.

SAFETY'S DEADLY DAILY DOUBLE

Edmonton—Safety's deadly daily double for 1933 was falls and motor vehicle accidents.

These two types of accidents, more than equalled the combined toll of the 10 other leading causes, fall and mishaps, firearms, poison gases, other gases and the miscellany of other types of accidents which contributed to last year's toll of killed-by-accident.

The Alberta Safety League says the total is reported by coroners for the 1933 edition of Accident Facts, the National Safety Council's statistical yearbook just off the press.

TOFIELD — ALBERTA

The Best Variety?

Many farmers are about to harvest fields of several of the new varieties. It would be a valuable contribution to agricultural knowledge if each farmer would make a careful note of the hundreds to the acre they thresh and other details of the different varieties they grow. This information then should be sent either to the nearest University or Dominion Experimental Farm, or handed to the local Elevator Agent.

PEACHES IN THE MENU

As the month of a bumper crop this season, peaches are being freely used in the daily menu as fresh fruit in desserts, cakes, pies, puddings and in several other ways. Housewives might do well advised to take advantage of the abundance of the fruit, which is now available at reasonable prices and put up a good supply of home-canned peaches. The following recipes may prove useful:—

Peach Marmalade—

18 peaches
2 oranges
1 lemon
Sugar
Water

Peel and slices the peaches. Remove seeds from oranges and put through food chopper. Mash all together, weigh, and allow an equal weight of sugar. First cook the fruit until tender in small amount of water, then add heated sugar and boil quickly until thick. Pour into hot sterilized glasses, cool, seal with paraffin wax and label.

Peach and Apple Marmalade.....

Use equal parts of peaches and apples, sliced. If the apples are very colorful, do not peel them. Add three-quarters of a cup of water to each pint of the mixture slowly until thick and clear. Seal in clean hot jars. Equal parts of rhubarb, peaches and apples may be used.

Peach Conserve (Method 1)

24 large peaches
1½ cups seedless raisins
1 cup walnuts (not ground rind)
2½ lb. sugar
2 oranges (juice and grated rind)
1 lemon (juice and grated rind)

Blanch and slice peaches. Add the sugar, raisins, juice and grated rind of the lemons and oranges and let glass.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By R. G. L. Breese, Director "The Crop Testing Plan."

Once again this year severe losses have been suffered in Western Canada from grasshoppers.

During the course of the Ages locusts have probably destroyed as much of man's precious foodstuffs as other drought or rust have done.

The Bible teems with references to the destruction of crops and pastures by locusts. Exodus tells that "Locusts will eat every herb of the land." Locusts have brought destruction from time immemorable in almost every country in the world. They were one of the most dreaded plagues of ancient Egypt, and there are records of great flights which swept across the whole of Europe and parts of Asia. One great swarm in 1690 which crossed the Red Sea was estimated to be 50,000 square miles in extent. All other great swarms was once observed over the sea a thousand miles from land. In the United States and Canada, during the time records have been kept, vast destruction to crops as occurred.

Whatever losses may be suffered this year, of one thing we can be sure, the losses have been greatly reduced by the splendid control methods designed by the professional ent-omologists of the United States and Canada.

DEVILLE

Parties have been in full swing around here lately. One was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. Stadnyn celebrating the birthday of their daughter, Alice. A good time of dancing was enjoyed. A cake decorated with candles placed in the centre of the table looked very attractive.

Another party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. Clark was held on Friday. It turned out to be a real old time dance. Lunch was served by three hostesses. Music was supplied at both parties by the local orchestra.

Minnie Lando recently spent a week with her pal Joan Morrow.

Fred Barwick who has been suffering with a sore foot is recovering satisfactorily.

Sam Stefanyn has gone to Round Hill for harvesting but will be back in a couple of months.

Victor Stefanyn is also working at Round Hill.

Albert Clark spend Sunday with his pal Sam Stefanyn.

Lyle Mitchell from Vancouver is spending his holidays with his cousins Eileen and Douglas Morrow.

Miss Joan Lando is fighting flies for the past week on Waverly Island. No great damage has been done as yet.

Chas. Halter spent a few days in Edmonton.

So we're getting a new teacher—and a man at that!

Line Elevators Do More Than Handle Your Grain

Line Elevators are continually guarding the interests of their farmer customers.

The Public Relations Department of the North West Grain Dealers' Association under the direction of Mr. L. W. Brockington, K.C., follows closely the actions and proceedings of all Governments and commissions which may be dealing with matters relating to grain. Every effort is made before these bodies to protect and promote the interests of our farmer customers.

Took an active part in the work of the Bracken Committee in urging upon the Dominion Government the continuation of the Canadian Wheat Board and 80 cent wheat.

* * *

Urged the Dominion Government to establish a Western Research Laboratory of the National Research Council. This laboratory would seek new uses and expanded markets for wheat and other farm products. This proposal was put forward following a survey which we made of the progress in research into new uses for farm products in the United States.

* * *

Financed seed and crop improvement work.

* * *

Financed research extending over a period of several years into weed control and eradication.

Our material financial support makes possible the tour of the Canadian Forestry Association's Tree Planting Car throughout the Prairie Provinces.

Continually advocating free international exchange of goods in order to regain and expand Canada's exports of wheat.

Continually endeavoring to impress on Governments and public bodies the disparity between the basic price at which the farmer sells his products compared with the price he pays for manufactured farm requirements which he must buy.

* * *

Proposed that Co-operative associations, as members should accept representation on the governing body of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange and urged appointment of a supervisor for the Grain Exchange.

You ask, "Why does my local Line Elevator do these things?"

We reply: Only through a prosperous and happy agricultural community can we prosper. Our interests are identical despite what is said by propagandists.

Having failed to secure a supply of gravel from the government pit at View Point, the secretary was instructed to endeavour to secure two carloads from the railway pit at Kinsella.

Some considerable discussion took place regarding the adoption of a definite policy of sidewalk building in the business section of Main Street. Members of council present were unanimous in feeling that a portion of construction should be undertaken each year; and it was decided to secure more detailed information as to costs of asphalt and cement walks.

The former teacher, Miss Jane Quessel has moved to Edmonton. The Hastings Lake teacher will teach in Deville this coming term.

"You have saved me from being murdered," said Barry. He caught Tom Haverll by the shoulders and turned him over.

"He isn't dead," he said. "Maybe we can pull him through."

"We've got to save him, Barry. We've got to! Oh, if you love me—"

The next minus she was sobbing wildly on Barry's arms.

"He—he's dead!" she gasped. She cowered away where she stood, her face in her hands

Barry did not lift his eyes to her; they remained brooding upon the gun, he kept turning the cylinder slowly

It was a six-shooter. He counted the shells.

"Lucy!" he shouted. "Lucy! You didn't kill him! You couldn't! There's not an empty shell in the gun! You didn't shoot at all!"

"Barry!" Then her face for a joyous instant so bright, clouded instantly "You are not telling me the truth, Barry. You want to save me and so you have put in a fresh cartridge—"

"I am sure! Wait!" He dashed outside and began calling at the top of his voice. "Molly! Molly, where are you?"

From out of the dark almost at his side Molly stepped silently up to him

"I know she said quietly. "Mr. Irun, Barry, an' I came back, an' I saw that man he is just like Jesse Conroy. I see him with your an' he is goin' kill you. But I kill him for other thing, Barry. Long time, he kill Robert, like you tell me. So I kill this man, that is the bad light in like Jesse and has same name—"

Suddenly, with no hand lifted to stay her, the half-Indian girl melted away into the night.

"I am so glad, so grateful to God!" cried Lucy. "And so ashamed to be glad at a time like that!"

"I don't want you to be glad, dear he said very gently. "He made it happen like that."

"Everyone will always think—"

He interrupted, wishing to shunt her thoughts aside, also seeking information. "What was it Molly wanted with you?" he asked.

"She wanted to ask about Jesse Conroy, and to warn us to watch out for him, since he might come here any time. And she was telling me something about—about Tom Ha, Haverll—"

"She knew him too?" he asked sw.fly

Lucy shook her head. "She had never seen him, but Jesse Conroy had told her bountifully of a man he called Cousin Tom that he was working a big scheme with, and I know he meant Tom Haverll."

"How did you learn?"

"Your father told me; he knew Jesse Conroy's father, Philip Conroy. He said that Philip's son Jesse, from the time he was big enough to lead and fire a gun, was the worst of a bad lot. He ran away from home with a wild cousin of his, named Tom Haverll. And your father said that, though Jesse Conroy came to be called the Laredo Kid, half the things laid to his door were done by by Tom Haverll."

"That tells us how Tom Haverll came by the fine stand box and paper pictures" mused Barry. "Jesse stole them from the Judge, Tom Haverll stole them from Jesse."

Barry stepped across the room to where Tom Haverll's body lay. He was drawing a blanket over the upturned face when he noted the corner of a wallet sticking out of the dead man's leather coat.

Barry opened the wallet; he found a folded paper which he opened to make sure that what Lucy wanted. At first glance he saw it was set, for it was discolored with years, breaking along its folds. He made out that it was a letter written to Philip Conroy' Esq., Laredo, Texas. It was signed. David Hamilton. Enclosed was a second brief note, also old, addressed to Hamilton's Ltd. Dave Hamilton, Laredo, Texas. And this one was signed, Jesse Conroy.

Barry and Lucy, going close to the fireplace, read the two letters together and as they read both exclaimed, voicing the same thought almost in the same words:

"This was the hold Jesse Conroy had over Judge Blue!"

"Enough to hang him," muttered Barry. "Somehow Tom Haverll got it from Jesse, along with the iron box, I reckon."

The first of the two notes read:

Philip Conroy, Esq.,
Laredo Flats,
Dear Philip: I have just received this sad communication from Parker Bros. Ltd., Chicago, and it is now 10 days ago. It would seem that all is ripe to go ahead. I have not heard at land ready what he can do, but will note that he is to come next Monday; also that he says the matter kept sub rosa. So I suppose you had better suppress your visit until I'll write you about it as soon as it is settled.

With our sincerest regards to you and your dear mother,

Yr. Most Obd't. Servant
David Hamilton.

The enclosure read:

Dear Col. Hamilton:

I'm coming Monday. Be sure to have the Tex Tornado Liniers by Cash. We will make a Hundred Thousand out of it sure. But keep it all a secret I will tell you why. I am counting on finding you alone Monday. This is important, Colonel. I am sending this over by one of the boys. He don't know what is in it.

Yours truly,
Parker Bros

"And then," growled Barry angrily, he went over and murdered every-body in the house except you, grabbed the box thousand and, may be on a flash of inspiration, carried you off!"

They heard an sounds as they rode along now; those quiet noises that belonged to the wilderness night, nor did they catch a glimpse of any fire until they were almost at journey's end. Lucy saw it first, just a bright glint through the pines.

"That's not a light in the house," said Barry, puzzled, as they pulled their horses down. "It's a fire out in the pasture; maybe it is a camp fire. you wait here a minute, Lucy! I'll go ahead on foot."

"Oh, be careful, Barry!"

Barry, peering around a leafy bush-eye, saw that there were three men under the old tree, and that two of them were busily occupied with cooking.

The two old men pulled on their ropes and their prisoner swung about so that Barry could see his rugged face and his wildly glaring eyes. It was Sarbee!

"Step it!" Barry shouted then, and ran forward.

With a sweet of elegant Timberline let go the rope; his assistant did the same, and Sarbee, finally planted again on solid earth, teetered of a moment, shook himself, and turned eloquent, bulging eyes on his rescuer

Barry was due to be startled once more. Sarbee had caught his breath and now burst into such a flood of curses and accusations and dire threats against Timberline and Cliff Bradger that his stream of invective was like a torrent from a dam breaking.

"That's why we done it, Sonny-boy!" Yah see, we figured out, me an' ol' Cliff here, we could make him talk. Well, we done it! Now I reckon he his tell us all he knows!"

Barry still laughing, said, "Wait here a minute," and hurried back to Lucy. A few minutes later all of them were in the house, where no one had thought of going to bed, gathered in a general conference.

"You—you knew a lot about Tom Haverll," put in Tom Haverll's young widow.

"A-plenty," said Sarbee. "Them two is a mighty close for gun'wal combination. I've learned bad men, but none worse'n them two—unless you count the Judge. An' both Jesse an' Tom somehow had the ol' Judge over a barrel; he was scared o' what they might do, or what they might tell on him, I reckon: an' for years they bled him o' money, an he was a hard bunker, too! Yah! Yah! all hoard o' the Laredo Kid! Well, I used to think it was Jesse Conroy; I got to thinkin' later it was Tom; an' later on, I got to wonderin' if both of 'em wasn't him!

"I was sorry I couldn't talk sooner," said Barbee, "I'd rather have saved Miss Lucy marryin' Tom Haverll."

They discussed briefly what effect the taking off of Tom Haverll might have upon the strategy of their prosecutors. The n remained the Judge, Laredo and Sheriff Ed Brawley, all planning weather in the name of summary just.es.

Barbee offered thoughtfully: "There's a lot fo square, fair-minded folks in and about Red Rock. They've heard only one side of the story. The thing to do is get the truth to 'em."

Ben Haverll nodded and said reverently, "Ah! Sheriff Brawley'll be talked to. Happens I know! For all-ur-seven years the Judge has had Sheriff Ed in his hip pocket; he can be meant by flattering his thumb on his table.

A blue-eyed Lucy clung to Ken Marsh, canvassing, "Oh, Kent Ken! If—"

A grey-eyed Lucy at last allowed herself to speak words she had sworn should not voice—not until seven days ago. But would that day ever come?

"I do love you so, Barry! I have proved you with all my faith, heart since that day in Tylerville. And Barry, if I don't come riding back to me—Kiss me, Barry."

Never before had they kissed. He held her off for little fee, he almost crushed her

"Hi!" gipped Timberline. "Are we ridin' or not?"

So they rode, the seven of them. Timber and Cliff Bradger headed straight for Red Rock on their own, and while the others turned off Barry, Lucy and cabin and the nine higher up and beyond.

"He's going to be as simple as kissing down hill," he said "Looks almost too good to be true, don't it, Sundown?"

Barry saw what he meant. Down in the bed of the ravine were a score of men who had been installed here by the Judge and Tom Haverll "to guard the property until the rights of the matter were settled." At the moment their "guarding" the property consisted in looting it.

They went swiftly but without revealing themselves. Five minutes later a score of astonished gold miners found themselves staring in to the mounds of five rifles.

They gaped and rubbed wet hands on their overalls and chaps-ps, and never a man of them said a word except for Barry's ears.

"Some of you know me and some of you don't," said Barry. "I'm Bar, Haverll, and them as my friends please. You've been put here by Judge Blue and Tom Haverll. Well, Tom Haverll's dead, with a bullet through his gullet, and the Judge is as good as hanging from a tree for murder done a dozen years ago. If you boys want to stick with those two, go for your guns!"

"Wh-what's that?" a man called both.

"I'll prove what I'm saying," returned Barry swiftly. "Some of you can come up and look at some papers I've got in my pocket. They'll show you how the Judge is out on a limb that's already broken off."

The Week In Edmonton

Edmonton, August 28—Completion of hard surfacing operation on the highway between Edmonton and the United States border was announced by Public Works minister W. A. Fallow by radio, Tuesday. "The highway is finished," he said. "There are no detours, and it is paid to the last penny, so that our children will not have to pay interest on borrowed money."

Earlier in the week, Mr. Fallow stated that construction crews were being sent to the northern highway between Slave Lake and Grimshaw in order to do improvements. A great deal of tonnage is ready to move over the road, and it has been stated expressly that the road must be able to stand up to the job. Crews were sent up accordingly.

Meanwhile, Edmonton awaits word word from Ottawa as to whether a matching sum of $1,000,000 is forthcoming to complete work on the Edmonton-Soho Beach section of the Jasper Highway. The province, having savings on hand due to the use of modern machinery, is anxious to have this part completed, and is placing the savings at the disposal of the new road requirements.

Establishment of two zones for preserve chicken shooting is announced by the government. Prairie chickens and ruffled grouse may be shot in the regions south of the Athabascan and Clear-water rivers from noon, October 2 until sun. down Oct. 31. South of the rivers mentioned and north of the C.N.R. main line running through Edson, Edmonton and Wainwright the season will extend from noon Oct. 2 to sundown Oct. 15.

Hungarian partridge may be shot south of the North Saskatchewan river from October 2 to November 30 inclusive. The bag limit is 10 birds for the season. Ducks and geese may be shot from September 7 to November 7 inclusive north of the Clear-water and Athabasca rivers and from September 15 to November 15 between those rivers and Red Deer. South of that the season extends from Sep. ember 29 to November 15.

Construction of a new federal government building opposite the Court House in Edmonton will commence late this fall. It is reported. The building is estimated to cost $400,000. Construction will take place on land which the federal government purchased from the civic government for $15,000.

Edmonton welcomed two distinguished sons of Nova Scotia here Monday, when Premier Angus MacDonald and Hon. C. D. Howe visited the Capital City. Guests of the convocation body and the Macdonald association, both writers attended luncheon in the Macdonald hotel at which Archbishop MacDonald, kinsman of Nova Scotian, Premier Aberhart and Hon. Leonin Raymond attended.

Work will shortly commence on a $20,000 extension to University Hospital intended for obstetrical work, the new addition is made possible by legislative appropriation passed at the last session. Seven additional maternity wards, with air-conditioning and other modern features, are included in the project.

Termination of transportation contracts with truckers who have been handling Imperial Oil products from Turner Valley was made necessary by provisions of the federal transport act, according to S. R. Sarsen, Edmonton divisional manager of the oil company. "With full knowledge of the facts, we believe the truckers will realize that both the cause and the remedy rest with parliament," said Mr. Sarsen. Many truckers are being thrown out of business, it is reported.

Probably due to the danger of war in Europe, activity in oil circles is noted here. Co-incident with the completion of the Turner Valley oil drilling purposes in the north, J. L. Irvin, of the Lands and Mines department said it is likely that more major oil fields will be discovered in the province. With the vexed question of transportation removed, drilling will increase not only in the Turner Valley, but in many other parts of the province.

ALBERTA SAFETY LEAGUE NOTES

Edmonton—The question is, "Are more men and women killed in accidents while they are at work or while they are not at work?"

The Alberta Safety League's answer takes from the National Safety Council's 1939 edition of its statistical yearbook, Accident Facts, just off the press, is that more are killed while they are NOT at work.

Last year, 94,000 persons died in accidents. Deaths of employed men and women contributed 34,500 to the total. Of those only 15,500 were due to work accidents. The remainder, 21,000 resulted from accidents that occurred away from work.

Of the rest at work fatalities suffered by employed persons, 13,000 resulted from motor vehicle accidents, 8,000 from non_motor accidents.

Northern Alberta during which he attended 17 golf clubs, Hardy E. Sister, secretary of the Alberta Provincial Club said horses had not looked better in years. Sleeping sickness forced cancellation of all colt shows last year.

PEACE AND WAR—

THERE IS nothing of greater importance today than the international crisis, now as this is being written, at its peak. Elections both federal and provincial are for the time being dropped, as interesting topics as the problem of peace or war is being pondered in the minds of men and women. In calm moments to most people it seems hardly conceivable that nations, supposedly among the most civilized in the world should even consider entering upon a modern war, as devastating as a modern war is known to be. A simple statement by an observer of the evacuation preparation rehearsal of London children, wearing gas masks, vividly describes the scene. He wrote "It would wring tears from stone." Yet despite the horror of inflicting pain and death upon innocents, and countless other horrors too, preparations are being constantly speeded to that end. It is true that leaders of nations are hesitating, that almost feverishly, they are trying to preserve peace before the terrible plunge is taken, but is there no hope of millions of people that sanity and reason may finally prevail.

To the average American and Canadian, gathering their information via the printed page and radio, the question ofttimes present itself. What do they want to fight for anyway? The peoples of other land across as large as Europe live side by side in harmony, why can't Europe do the same? The answer, if there is an answer to such a question lies in the past history of Europe. Within the memory of living men Europe and America have always been Canada and the United States boundaries have varied little if any at all. Both Canada and the United States boundaries have varied little if any at all. Both Canada and the United States have enjoyed over a hundred years of peace between two countries with two thousand miles of unfortified boundary. But in Europe there has been no permanent boundary for over a thousand years. There probably never was. Populated at a time when travel was slow and intercourse between peoples infrequent, when learning was the privilege of a few and communication among common peoples rare, separate nations, occupying distinct areas grew up, each one steeped in its own national pride and traditions. In those days the people went to the ballot box and for over a thousand years Europe's national boundaries have been in a state of flux. We in Canada particularly the younger generation cannot realize. France, Germany, Italy, Russia, as if they have always been and always will be occupying the same area in Europe. It is hard to visualize ever changing national boundaries. Every so often in history a leader arises fired with patriotic zeal, who remembering the real and imaginary wrongs inflicted upon his particular nation, devotes his life to rectifying those wrongs and in so doing invariably is imbued with the urge to make his country larger and more powerful than all the other countries surrounding it. War is waged with resulting victories and either the leader goes down to ignominious defeat or another piece is added to the already powerful nation.

In the year 814 and immediately prior thereto, the Frank empire revived by Charimagne, spread over most of Europe. By 1095 the Frank Empire had shrank at the expense of a German Empire, and there were also numerous other boundary changes. By 1360 the map of Europe looks like a zig-zag puzzle, everybody having a piece. Through the centuries, by successive stages changes are made, depicting gains and loss by conflicting forces. By 1914 the map of Europe had assumed a familar form to the present generation. Germany was a solid block of territory, irregularly shaped but unbroken. For Baltic sea ports she had Memel, Danzig and Hamburg. By 1919 Germany's boundaries were again changed, and in 1930 changed again.

Canadians and Americans often find difficulty in understanding the complex of peoples living in Europe. To Europeans, however much they dislike war, it has always been a present menace. The economic, territorial and power desires on the part of first one leader and then another, working on the patriotic passions of the people, make war always possible and frequently imminent.

Perhaps greater travel opportunities with easier communication will in time wear away the desire for territorial expansion. Perhaps Europeans will some day realize that a happy life for themselves and their families is of equal importance to patriotic fervor. Perhaps reason and sanity, if for no other cause than fear of the terrible consequences of modern warfare, may prevail.

STRANGE MEETINGS

If suddenly a cloud of earth should rise,
And walk about, and breathe, and speak, and love,
How one would tremble, and in what surprise
Gasp: "Can you move?"

I see men walking, and I always feel:

I can't learn how to know men, or conceal
How strange they are to me.

THE ALLEGED GLUT OF WHEAT

Numerous articles are now appearing in periodicals in Canada, the United States, Great Britain and in other countries, which speak of the "Great Glut of Wheat."

The writers make it appear, either by direct statement or by inference, that the world is suffering from an unprecedented glut or surplus of wheat, and that there is no demand for this great stream. We are told that the surplus has been brought about by two factors; first by the failure of wheat growers to reduce acreage as it became apparent that wheat was being produced in excess requirements, and secondly by the high tariffs and other restrictions against the importation of wheat set up by the wheat importing countries of the world, all because of the desire of these importing countries to accumulate their own farmers to produce the foodstuffs necessary for all their people with the object of avoiding importations.

The only alternative left, therefore, suggest these writers, is for the farmers in the wheat exporting countries to reduce immediately their wheat acreage in accord with the present restricted world demand.

Are these the true underlying facts, the basic reasons behind the present situation? Is the surplus or so-called "glut" as great as we are led to believe? Is the reduction of wheat acreage by Canada and by other wheat exporting countries the proper solution?

Important Facts

Let us consider some of the facts. The truth is, that the whole world produces and consumes about the same food figures about 5,000 million bushels of wheat. The excess or burdensome surplus which now forms, what is termed the "Great Glut of Wheat" consists of only about 350 million bushels, or about one-tenth only of the world's annual actual use, or sufficient wheat for only 37 days' consumption by the people of the world.

Thirty_seven days supply is not a great deal of safety, of course, and, as often happened in the past with surpluses of similar size per capita, nature, with a slight change of her conditions in some important part of the world would easily reduce crops so that their present burdensome surplus would disappear, and so would disappear in a few short months. These abnormal crops of nature, the surpluses that have accumulated in the past. At the end of the Napoleonic wars, for instance, there was a wheat surplus quite as large per capita as at present one, and a Royal Commission was appointed to see what might be done with it. The matter was given to various persons before this British Royal Commission available. Mr. William Bickerdyke for instance a farmer of England, gave in part the following advice to the Royal Commission:

"Desperate cases require desperate remedies and we are no immediate remedy for our case, which is, indeed, desperate, but for the government to immediately buy up a considerable part of the surplus of grain, at present before the mar,

Investigation reveals that the wheat importing countries actually had no alternative, and that they were forced to limit the amount of wheat the purchased, for the simple reason that the wheat exporting countries themselves had restricted, by means of high tariffs and other devices, the amount of goods which they would accept from their wheat customers, and which goods were the only form of money their wheat customers had.

Considering the great need for additional food in the world today, obviously, then, what is needed is not a further restriction of the already insufficient supplies of food stuffs, but simply that governments, particularly those of the wheat exporting countries, should loosen up a little with which Canada may soon be at war. In terms of war in any situation of such people ordinarily difficult, but we can make their existence of war will from first to discovering matters that might have a considerable significance. It would, if a person, be merely an act of simple kindness and good-fellowship to do our staffs they so badly need, not only best to make the lot of these good people as comfortable, but also to reduce suffering among the infant, boys as a whole, by saying nothing that would make them think that will war and cities abroad, and therefore to make More next soon to be in accordance the with the principles of humanity, but in keeping with the principle's of simple all want to live in peace and friendship and Christianity.

Classified ads are cheap, effective, and cover a wide range. Implements, hay, greenfeed or grain in fact almost any used saleable article can often be sold by meanns of the humble "Classified." PROSPEROUS FARM COMMUNITY IS AIDS OF LINE ELEVATORS

Identity of Interests Exists Between Farm and Elevator.

The interest of the Line Elevator Company in the farmer goes much beyond the handling of his grain. The North-West Grain Dealers' Association, some years ago, organized a Public Relations Department under the direction of L. W. Brockington, K.C., one of Canada's outstanding public men. This department has been dedicated to protecting and promoting the interests of its farmer customers.

Much important work has been undertaken by Line Elevators. This includes: advocating continuation of the Wheat Board and the 80-cent price; undertaking a survey of research into industrial utilization of farm products in the United States; advocating establishment of a Western division of the National Research Council to find new industrial uses for wheat and other farm products; financed seed and crop improvement work; financed wood control research; assisted in financing the tour of the Tree Planting Car; sought a lessening of disparity in prices of products which the farmer sells compared with goods that he must buy; proposed that co-operative associations as members should accept representation on the governing body of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, and urged Government supervision of the Exchange; continually advocating free international exchange of goods in order to regain and expand wheat markets.

All this is valuable work on behalf of agriculture, and the Line Elevator Companies are to be commended for the part that they are playing in seeking to make the Prairies a better place in which to live.

Britain & France Declare War On Germany

DESPERATE FIGHTING IN POLAND

GERMAN SUB. SINKS BRITISH PASSENGER LINER

Over the week end both Britain and France declared war on Germany. The action was taken when Germany failed to reply to the final note of Great Britain asking that Germany remove her troops from Poland preparatory to a conference of the great powers as proposed by Italy.

Poland had been invaded for several days and desperate fighting had already and is still taking place. German troops have forced back the Polish troops and have subjected Warsaw, the Polish capital to heavy bombardment, inflicting considerable loss of life among the civilian population. Thousands of refugees are fleeing from the city.

France has commenced operations on the Western front but so far no major engagements have taken place.

The British Air Squadron attacked a German naval base and severely damaged two German naval ships. The British lost some planes in this engagement.

On Sunday, just seven hours after the declaration of war, a German submarine torpedoed the British liner Athenia, enroute from Glasgow to Montreal with 1400 persons aboard. The ship was torpedoed north of the Shetland Island without warning. The sub broke surface and shelled the wireless room. Most of the passengers were saved after harrowing experiences. The exact loss is not yet known but is expected to be about 100 souls.

The British and French air fleets are busy and dropped millions of pamphlets telling the German people that the war is of Hitler's making, that Britain is not making war on the German people but on the present German regime of threat of force and force over negotiation.

Check Your Driving Against This Code

Edmonton—In connection with its current safety campaign a new "safe-driving code" of 10 points has been worked out by the Alberta Safety League. Motorists would do well to study the code, which has been prepared by motoring experts in the form of questions, as follows:

1. Do you keep your mind on your driving, watch the movements of the other cars, and try to anticipate what they will do?

2. Do you keep in the line of traffic, especially when nearing the top of a hill or a sharp turn?

3. Do you comply with traffic regulations, signals and signs, and slow down at crossings and dangerous intersections?

4. Do you know the feeling of having your car always under control, by having it, brakes especially, inspected regularly?

5. Do you watch for pedestrians, particularly children

6. Do you signal to the car behind you when you intend to change your course?

7. Do you maintain a speed satisfactory to motorists both ahead and behind you?

8. Do you give other motorists the right of way when there is any question about it?

9. Do you dip or dim your lights when meeting other cars at night?

10. Do you use the same courtesy that you would like to have shown to you?

SYNOPSIS

Barry Haverill was hunting for a cousin of his, Barry Lacey, known as the Laredo Kid, who murdered his brother, Robert. Barry is befriended by Judge Rice and his daughter Lucy. The Judge turns out to be a friend of Laredo's and a bad actor. Barry escapes, however, and meets an old man named Tombeline, who also is pursuing for the Laredo Kid. After several days of searching Barry returns to Judge Rice's house, where he meets a man called Tom Haverill whom he accuses of being his cousin Jesse, the slayer of Barry's brother. Convinced of his utter folly, he has a gun battle, both getting hurt. Recovered, Barry discovers Tom Haverill is not Jesse, but Barry's father. In a battle with Haver, a man, Lucy is shot by his cash—in the confusion. There he finds the real Laredo Kid wounded and dying. There, it learns she is not Judge Rice's daughter but a wealthy Texas who parents were slain when she was a small child. Judge Rice and Tom Haverill, who Barry has disowned, is not Laredo, come after him with a posse. Tobin Barry by surprise. Tom Haverill is about to shoot when Molly, a half breed girl who loved Robert, Barry's brother, fires. Tom Haverill dies. In his pockets they find faded letters making Judge Rice at the murderer of Barry's father. The posse takes Laredo and Barry to Judge Rice's home, returning with a doctor. Barry and Tombeline get the crop on the men who are after them. Barry tells them the truth about Judge Rice.

That quiet little woman, Barry's mother, became like a she-wolf protecting her cubs. Incredibly swift, she leaped for the old rifle standing against the wall, dead Robert's gun where she had placed it when thinking that Barry might want it.

The Kid's gun came up out of the holster in a gesture too quick for the eye to follow. He trusted the trigger gently, that devil's grin still on his face; there was the roar of explosion, the flash of orange fire, and the rifle clattered to the floor.

He had very nicely shot the woman through the right forearm.

The Judge burst out explosively, though he made no gesture toward his own gun.

"Look here, Laredo! This sort of thing—"

Laredo whirled and all without warning fired a second shot, and the Judge clutched his abdomen.

The Judge's gun was still in its holster; he had no enough to drag it forth He had lurched toward Barry's sister. Instinctively she made a swift movement toward it.

Why Laredo did not shoot her is not to be known. Perhaps it was the thought of saving ammunition; perhaps the easiest thing was what he did. As she stooped he struck her brutally with the barrel of the gun in his hand, and the little woman dropped mercifully unconscious across the Judge's body.

"Cousin' along peaceful-like now!" asked the Kid of the other Lacey, standing and grinning at him and using his gun about upon a forefinger through its trigger guard. "Say you is a harry, an' I won't hurt no more o' your frien's. Say you is a harry, an' baby mule an' I'll pay another bullet through ol' baby Haverill."

Lucy tried to answer and could not speak. His lips twitched as he watched, and saw too that she had been shot through the shoulder. As he drew her into his arms he heard her, still whispering, say so steadily as she could: "He—he's taken your Lucy s-away with him, Barron."

"Laredo? When? Where,? Molly?"

She tried to point but could only and feebly to indicate the direction.

"Only a minute ago. Go, Baron. Kill him. Baron. He—he is not a man—just a murder machine. God wants you to kill him, I think, my son—to put him out of his misery!"

Barry put her down gently where she was.

"I'll be right back, Mama," he said softly, "with Lucy. Just a minute, Mama."

His horse was fresher than the two with which Laredo was trying to escape, and Barry overtaking them before they had gone a mile. Laredo heard and saw who followed; concealed in his vest out of the saddle, dragging Lucy along with him. As his Cousin Tom Haverill had done in like circumstance, so now did the Laredo Kid do, holding the half fainting Lucy before him with one arm, his other hand on his gun.

"Let me pull'm bringin' me back my of red gun, Cousin Barry," he cooed, and Lucy saw that for all his jovialness there was a look of fear on his face. Barry came forward, walking slowly, the old red gun in his hand. Laredo shouted, "That's close enough, Cousin Barry! One more step an'—"

"I'm going to kill you, Laredo," said Barry and came on.

Laredo yelled back at him, "Yuh fool, yuh'll hit! her!"

"Barry!" screamed Lucy. "Barry, save me! I don't care if I am killed! Don't shoot for me!"

It wanted something next door to a miracle to spoed that bullet by the girl's wicked body to the mark that it is Laredo's lean body. The miracle was not forthcoming. Barry could not hit Lucy. But it hit Laredo too. It struck her in the tip of the shoulder which went down with Lucy's shoulder an inch or so lower than Lucy's.

Laredo lifted himself a fraction of a second from the body of Lucy Barry and as he threw his gun forward Barry was already firing again. A long red furrow sprang into the face as he fell backward. Yet, dropping back he loosed another bullet with that almost uncanny certainty of his.

Barry, twice hard hit lay for a moment where he was, then, rising, staggering dizzily, his hand going his on the gun.

He shook his head; his teeth set his mind with a supreme effort he set up. He saw Laredo sitting up so awkwardly as himself. The gun in Barry's weakening fingers was heavy and his head, grown numb and weak, was about to fall from his shoulders with the greatest difficulty, exerting his will to the utmost, did he lift his head.

He heard Laredo speak as across some tremendous stone-filled distance.

"I'm done for," was what he was saying. "Put I'm dead, Cousin Barry, no."

As the Kid spoke, he managed to shove the muzzle of his gun against her head. Barry fired without conscious thought. The muzzle of Laredo's gun arm before he could pull the trigger.

Barry got to his feet, took two or three unsteady steps toward Lucy and pitched forward on his face.

When he regained consciousness he was in bed. Lucy was there, and other anxious faces turned toward him, his father, Lucy's, Tom Haverill's, yes and here was his sister Lucy, alive, and there on another cot lay Laredo, white but serene. And his own Lucy, too—

A snuggling closer, us, devoured and molded.

Time marches on. New dishes appear. New methods are invented and discovered. But the cookie is as popular with us as it was with our parents or our grandparents. Any recipes like the following should help to make a cookie jar empty.

Mahogany Ice Box Cookies

4 cups sifted cake flour; 2 teaspoons double-acting baking powder; ½ teaspoon salt; 1¼ cups softened butter or other shortening; 1¼ cups sugar; 2 eggs, unbeaten; 4 squares unsweetened chocolate, melted; 1 teaspoon vanilla; 2 cups shredded coconut.

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift again. Combine butter, sugar, eggs, chocolate, and vanilla, beating with spoon until blended; then add coconut. Add flour gradually, mixing well after each addition. Divide dough in two parts. Place on waxed paper and shape in rolls, 1¼ inches in diameter; roll each in waxed paper. Chill over night, or until firm enough to slice. Cut in ¼ inch slices; bake on ungreased baking sheet in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) 12 minutes, or until done. Makes 7 dozen cookies.

IT WILL BE remembered by most of us that during the 1914—1918 conflict, charges of profiteering were very frequent. It is quite possible that in some cases those charges were exaggerated. But there is no doubt that much profiteering was done, not only in Canada but in other countries as well. Now that, unfortunately, another war has broken out, in which Canada in some form or other will serve the Empire, it is well at the outset to remember some of the civilian evils of the last war and try as far as humanly possible to eliminate them.

It is not right that personal fortunes and superfluous gain should be built up for one class upon the foundation of heroism and suffering by another. War brings among its many miserable problems the problem of equal and adequate service by all. It is not an easy one. In a way, each individual who pays indirect or direct federal taxes is helping to pay for past wars and the present one. But this is not enough. If the time should come when the cream of Canada's manhood is once again called to the colors, either by persuasion or conscription, other forms of endeavor should be called also. Capital, in this modern mix-up, we choose to name civilization, plays a tremendous part. This is to be seen in the ever-swiftly mounting prices of commodities. Therefore if the manhood and womanhood of the nation is to be called on for personal sacrifice, capital, which in other words those possessing capital, also should be called on to make capitalistic sacrifice. There are a great many people in the Dominion who freely express themselves as believing that if conscription of man power is found necessary, conscription of wealth should be made also. The belief is quite sound, but careful consideration will cause people to realize the tremendous problems involved if capitalistic contribution is to be in the least degree equitable. The only way conscription of capital could be equitable would be for the government to take over all capital which would mean taking over all industry, for capital is the mainspring of industry.

But whether it is done or not done regarding conscription of capital, it should not be difficult for the federal government to prevent profiteering. Great Britain has already set a price on some commodities of everyday use and it would be a splendid thing if the Canadian government followed suit. As regards most foodstuffs, Canada is very fortunately situated and it should not be difficult for the government to peg retail prices of important food commodities. . . .

THE FIRST FROST—

WEDNESDAY MORNING residents of this district were reminded that once again Summer is on the wane, Autumn is here and ere long the chill blasts of Winter will blow once more—there was ice on the water. But as everyone here knows, a frost in Alberta, does not mean winter has come, more often than not, a frost precedes a spell of fine weather which we are pleased to call Indian Summer.

Cast Monotony Out Of Meals

It's almost automatic, isn't it, to think dinner in terms of meat, potatoes and some other vegetable? The only thing is to change the kind of meat and what other vegetable so that would be somewhat different. Why not break the monotony of such meals and as a start, think of fish instead of meat? There is such a wide variety of fish available to the Canadian housewife at all times that it can be served frequently and not grow tiresome. And then there are so many ways of serving fish that delicious variations is accompany it that a whole new field of culinary exploration is opened up. As the next step in getting away from routine, serve a cake or cake slice instead of a cooked vegetable. That is a particularly appropriate step at this time of the year. As for desserts, there is no reason to be in a rut here, but if you want recipe that will please you. With this suggested menu, and a little imagination, you'll start a new dinner table era. There is nothing elaborate or difficult to prepare—it's just a change for the better.

THE WORLD OF WHEAT

By R. G. L. Strange, Director "The Crop Testing Plan."

Crop Testing Plan meetings, recently held at 94 different points over the Province, reveal that farmers are openly seeking advice about the variety of wheat to use.

The samples were collected by elevator agents at 1,650 points in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and were tested in groups at 101 points throughout the West. The analysis of these samples, each one of which represents a farmers' field of wheat, reveals that this year not less than 28 per cent classified as A's, which means that 28 per cent of the wheat grown was of the variety to a high standard of excellence, non resistant, moreover, of a recommended variety of good milling and baking value. The average of A's for the province as a whole has been only 20 per cent.

The investigation reveals, however, that there is still room for improvement, for no less than 40 per cent of the farmers are losing money by producing crops giving lower yields and lower grades than needed to simply because these farmers are using either unsuitable or obsolete, need poor quality varieties, or else mixtures of early and late varieties in their fields. Such farmers, naturally, making it impossible for the farmer to obtain the full benefit of labor. Good, therefore, as the quality of Canadian wheat is, the fact that conscription of man power is found necessary, conscription of wealth should be made also. Breeding And Breediness

During the past twenty or thirty years, the breed has been gradually lost its importance as a hatching and rearing medium due to the advent of commercial hatcheries and reliable brooders, states D. G. Dancy, Dominion Experimental Station, Lacombe, Alta. This has been brought about by the change in method for replenishing annually the flock of laying birds, the considerable tendency toward broodiness manifested by the popular American breeds of poultry such as Barred Rock, Rode Island Red, and White Wyandotte had to be reduced by breeding in order that they might become so free from this characteristic as were the Leghorns.

While, at first, it was doubted whether much damage could be brought about by breeding, it is now recognized that constant selection of non-broody and less intense broody lines has so eliminated this liability in some flocks of heavy breeds that they now compare favourably with the Leghorns, both for egg production and lack of broodiness.

In developing the breeds of White Wyandottes at the Sommerland Experimental Station, it has been part of the policy to include in the breeding pens no hen that went broody on more than two occasions during the pullet laying year. All males used for breeding purposes have been bred from non-broody stock. This system has proven so useful that, whereas in the year 1922-23 the annual loss in the flock of pullets went broody at least once, in 1927-28 selective breeding had reduced this to 11.5 per cent of the pullet flock. Birds exhibiting broodiness more than twice in the pullet year had been reduced from 7.5 per cent to 3.9 per cent in the same period.

It has been found that egg production of the flock has increased by a little over 70 eggs a bird since 1923-28, and, while other aspects of selective breeding are in some measure accountable for this difference, there is no doubt that the reduction of broodiness by breeding has been a major influence.

There was an approximate difference of 9 eggs per bird last year between the average number of eggs per bird last year between the average number of eggs laid by the non-broody pullets and the broody pullets.

It may be argued that it is easy to eliminate broodiness from flocks that are trap-nested regularly, and that it is more difficult to control it in the ordinary poultryman's flock. In actual fact, however, the desired result can be secured by the simple procedure of placing a celluloid leg band on the pullet's leg and; time it goes broody. It is then an easy matter to cull from the brooding pens all hens carrying any, or more than two bands, depending upon where the culling line is to be drawn. In any case, the use of two brooding males from non-broody lines is advisable if a rapid advance is to be made. The small amount of labour involved will be well repaid.

Assist Farmers Buy Feeder Livestock

Effective from September 1 to December 31, 1939, inclusive, a Feeder Purchase Policy, similar to that which was in effect in the Fall of 1938, has been authorized by Hon. James G. Gardiner, Dominion Minister of Agriculture. There are three editions of this Policy: one each for Eastern Canada, the Prairie Provinces, and British Columbia, respectively, on carload shipments billed within the specific time, and has been promulgated so that farmers may be assisted to make personal selection of feeder stock of cattle and lambs in Western Canada; also in the case of the Prairie Provinces to encourage the winter feeding of young cattle and lambs in the districts where feed is available.

The policy provides for the refund of the one-way travelling expenses of farmers, or agents of farmers, who purchase certain classes of stock for feeding purposes, subject to the stipulated conditions. In the case of farmers of Eastern Canada from points west of Manitoba, the policy will apply on feeder cattle purchased at the Saskatoon Feeder Sale on Oct. 5 and 6; feeder cattle, lambs and breeding ewes at the Moose Jaw Sale on October 10, 11, 12, and 13; feeder cattle, lambs, and breeding ewes purchased at any country point on the province; and feeder cattle and lambs (but not breeding ewes) purchased at the stockyards. Stockyard purchases must pass inspection as to type and quality by the stockyard representative of the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

The Understanding Host

A fashionably dressed woman approached the flower-seller and asked for a shilling's worth of blooms. After the purchase she inquired: "Will you be here next Wednesday, as I shall want some flowers for my daughter? She's coming to get that day."

"She shall have the best on the market, ma-am," the woman answered. "What's she to be?"—Glasgow Citizer

This Little Pig Went To Market

And this one stayed at home. Well, sometimes it did and sometimes it didn't. You see, a farmer might have inserted a classified ad "pigs for sale", and then Mr. Pig or Messrs. Piggies would simply have a change of home. Many farmers who have pigs or other kinds of livestock for sale make use of classified ads to let other farmers know of it. Classified ads are cheap, effective, and cover a wide range. Implements, hay, greenfeed or grain in fact almost any used saleable article can often be sold by meanns of the humble "classified." Classified ads "produce" things sometimes too. Somebody wanting something simply say so through the medium of a classified, and presto, somebody bobs up with just the wanted article for sale.

Officially At War

Monday's news despatches, and prior radio announcements, brought word of Canada's official entry into the war against Nazi Germany, Sunday, when the government gave effect to the almost unanimous will of parliament. For the first time in history the senior Dominion of the British Commonwealth, on its own account and by its own will, exercised "the most awesome prerogative of nationhood" by declaring a state of war. In 1914 the government merely published the British war proclamation. Parliament expressed its will late Saturday night at the special war session by adopting the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, traditional method of giving approval to general government policies. Previously the Premier told the House adoption of the address would give the government authority to declare a state of war.

The special session will now consider necessary legislation and disposition of new taxes and vote money to pay for Canada's war effort. A resolution approved Monday on the House of Commons votes and provisionings for the expenditure of sums not exceeding $100,000,000 to defray expenses of the war during the present fiscal year which ends next March 31st.

FOUR MEMBERS DISAPPROVE

During the debate on the address in the Commons, Saturday, four voices were raised in disapproval of the government's attitude, but the Senate gave its approval unanimously after six senators had spoken.

MR. WOODSWORTH'S STAND

J. S. Woodsworth, veteran of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, broke with his followers to oppose Canada's participation in the conflict and three French speaking members from Quebec voiced their opposition. Ligueore Lacombe (Lib., Laval-Two Mountains) and Wilfrid Lacroix (Lib., Quebec-Montmorency) moved and seconded an amendment to the address expressing regret the government had not seen fit to advise the governor-general that Canada could not participate in the war. They were alone in supporting the amendment when the vote was called although earlier Maxime Raymond (Lib., Beauharnois) spoke against participation.

Unless five members stand to demand a recorded vote decisions in the House of Commons are taken on shouts of "ayes" and "nays". Mr. Lacombe and Mr. Lacroix stood but three more were needed. A minute later on the main motion to adopt the address, Mr. Woodsworth stood to signify his opposition, but again there was no recorded vote and the motion was adopted.

Every political party represented in the House rallied in support of the government in its war policy.

TORIES AND SOCIAL CREDIT

Conservative leaders under Hon. Dr. R. J. Manion, gave unquestioning support. Social Credit, under John Blackmore, raised no objection but urged universal conscription of wealth, industry and manpower as the best means of contributing to victory

MR COLDWELL FOR C C F

Mr. J. Coldwell of Rosetown-Biggar, was spokesman for the C C F. in view of Mr Woodsworth's dissent That group favored economic aid to the Allies, but opposed an expeditionary force and conscription.

IMPERIAL ASSURANCE

Emphat assurance Canada's entry into the war would not mean a conscription came from Rt Hon. Ernest Lapointe, minister of justice Speaking on earlier declaration he would not support or be a member of a government which apply con scription, he said he and his three fellow ministers from Quebec would step out of the cabinet were any such steps launched.

Government Levies Excess Profits Tax

Ottawa, Sept. 12—The wartime budget delivered in the House of Commons today disclosed an excess profits tax will be levied by the government on all business and additional taxes will be placed on incomes, all alcoholic and aerated beverages, tea, coffee and tobacco to meet war costs.

With an estimated deficit for the current fiscal year, including war costs up to March 31st, 1940, of $156,000,000, the Minister announced plans to meet a large portion of it out of increased taxes on luxuries and excess profits.

All businesses, whether incorporated or not, will pay a tax ranging from 16 per cent to 60 per cent of profits ranging in excess of five per cent of $5 per cent of capital, or an alternative tax of 50 per cent on all profits in excess of the average for the last four years.

Domestic and imported spirits will be taxed an additional $5 per gallon excise duty, the excise tax on all wines is doubled, the excise duty on imported beer increased by nine cents a gallon and corresponding increase made in the excise duty on malt, malt syrup and beers brewed from other than malt.

No change was made in the sales tax but some exemptions were removed including electricity and gas used for domestic purposes.

Excise duty on cigarettes will be increased by $1 per 1,000 and on tobacco by five cents a pound.

Aerating companies going into the manufacture of soft drinks will be taxed two cents per pound.

Customs tariff rates on tea will be increased five cents a pound when invoiced up to 25 cents, 10 cents when invoiced up to 45 cents a pound, and 10 cents when invoiced at 45 cents or more a pound

Coffee, now generally entered free, will be taxed five cents by a straight 10 cents a pound under all tariffs.

Comments On The Wheat Situation

During the month of August the price of wheat for No. 1 Northern in store Fort William rose 6¾ cents, and at Liverpool Canadian wheat increased in price 5⅞ cents, yet at the same time at Liverpool Argentine and Australian wheat only rose a fraction of a cent.

Apparently there was a sharper demand at Liverpool for Canadian wheat than for other export sorts, explainable no doubt because of preparations being made for "stocking up" for the then expected war.

Since August 31st, however, the October future on the Winnipeg market has gone up from 16 cents on August 31st to 90 cents at this moment of writing, registering a rise of 74 cents in six market days.

The simple cause of this, of course, is that war was declared by Great Britain on September 3rd, and the price rise is a natural reaction, particularly when one considers that the price of Canadian wheat, even in 1938 (1 Northern Fort William) is well below its present day average cost of production.

At the beginning of the last war on the fall of 1914, the price of 1 Northern Fort William was 98 1-2 cents on July 31st. War was declared by Great Britain on August 4th, 1914, and wheat took a steady rise from 98 1-2 cents on July 31st to a peak of $1.16⅝ by August 30th. It then stayed within a few cents of this price until the end of November, when a steady rise took place week by week which reached a peak for that movement of $1.54⅜ by February 19th, 1915. Prices then fell back until by September 7th, 1915, they were down to 88 1-2 cents, actually lower than the price registered on July 31st — the eve of the declaration of war. From this point, however, prices rose with irregular fluctuations attaining a peak of $2.00 by May 11th, 1917.

It is to be noted, however, that there is a much larger surplus of wheat south of Canada, in the United States and in the Argentine at the start of this present war than there was at the beginning of the world war in 1914.—Searle Grain Company, Ltd.

Lunching At Home

Lunch at home does not need to be a makeshift affair with yesterday's leftovers. A dainty, tasty lunch which the family are pleased to be able to get home for, can be worked into a busy morning just as easily as a slap-dash meal. Take this menu for instance. Casserole of Salmon, hot biscuits, a simple green salad and fruit—it gives a new meaning to the old refrain "there's no place like home."

Casserole of Salmon

2 tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca
1 cup canned salmon, flaked
1 tablespoon onion, chopped
1 cup milk
½ teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
1 cup celery, diced
1 tablespoon melted butter
6 to 8 unbaked baking powder biscuits, rolled ¼ inch thick

Combine ingredients in order given. Turn into greased casserole; bake in hot oven (425 degrees F.) 25 minutes, stirring twice during first 10 minutes of baking. Place biscuits on top of salmon mixture after it has baked 10 minutes, return to oven; bake 12 to 15 minutes longer to bake biscuits. Serves 4.

Baking Powder Biscuits

2 cups sifted flour
2 teaspoons Baking powder
4 tablespoons butter or other shortening
½ teaspoon salt
2/3 cup milk (about)

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift again. Cut in shortening, add milk gradually until soft dough is formed. Roll ¼ inch thick on slightly floured board. Cut with floured biscuit cutter. Bake in hot oven (450 degrees F.) 10 to 15 minutes. Makes 12 biscuits.

Government Declaration Of Policy

Federal Social Credit members and members of the Alberta Cabinet met in an all day session Monday. The problem that was before us on this occasion was one of the most serious and far reaching that has been discussed by us during our term of office. The situation arising out of the war in Europe was discussed from all its various and intricate angles and the part which the Provincial and the Social Credit party should take, was fully discussed. The Federal members left Monday night for Ottawa fully aware of the serious nature of the situation and the grave responsibilities which are theirs as representatives of the people in this time of crisis.

The firm conviction that was reached after much discussion was expressed in a resolution that was adopted unanimously by both the Alberta Government and the Social Credit Federal members as follows:

"Owing to the very serious situation in the Northern Fort William is well below its present day average cost of production.

At the beginning of the last war on the fall of 1914, the price of 1 Northern Fort William was 98 1-2 cents on July 31st War was declared by Great Britain on August 4th, 1914, and wheat took a steady rise from 98 1-2 cents on July 31st to a peak of $1.16⅝ by August 30th. It then stayed within a few cents of this price until the end of November, when a steady rise took place week by week which reached a peak for that movement of $1.54⅜ by February 19th, 1915. Prices then fell back until by September 7th, 1915, they were down to 88 1-2 cents, actually lower than the price registered on July 31st — the eve of the declaration of war. From this point, however, prices rose with irregular fluctuations attaining a peak of $2.00 by May 11th, 1917.

It is to be noted, however, that there is a much larger surplus of wheat south of Canada, in the United States and in the Argentine at the start of this present war than there was at the beginning of the world war in 1914.—Searle Grain Company, Ltd.

"Owing to the very serious situation in the Northern Fort William is well below its present day average cost of production.

"We, the Provincial Cabinet, resolve that Canada, in co-operation with the other members of the British Commonwealth of Nations, should effectively support Great Britain and allies in the present conflict."

On numerous occasions during the discussions the idea was expressed that need of general co-operation in the present grave emergency was so great that all groups should be ready to approach the subject apart from any partisan bias or prejudice and with the sincere spirit of national unanimity and harmony of purpose.

We were firmly convinced that the task which confronts our country is so great that it will require the most self-sacrificing effort of every Canadian citizen in order to bring the struggle to a successful and speedy conclusion. We were convinced that the great wastage of life and property can be prevented by throwing the full weight of our resources behind Britain and her allies at the very beginning of the conflict.

Very careful consideration was given to the way by which Canada could give this support most efficiently. The one outstanding feature which we feel to be most essential is the just demand of our citizens for the greatest possible equalization of sacrifice which the struggle will necessitate. It is evident that sacrifice of life and limb is the worst

New Insect Damages Wheat Identified As Hessian Fly

The School of Agriculture at Vermilion received reports through August from many districts of damage in wheat fields that was unfamiliar to Office of the Provincial Entomologist. The reports came from Lloydminster to Tofield and North to the Saskatchewan river.

Investigation has established that the damage is not attributable to either the wheat stem saw fly or bad as many farmers supposed, but is directly due to the activities of the Hessian Fly, an insect which has been causing some damage in Saskatchewan, but had not previously been reported in Alberta. In all cases the plant was found to break at a point immediately above the third node from the base. When opened at this point, one or two small pupae very similar to a grain of wheat in the seed are found embedded in the straw.

Professor E. H. Strickland, Provincial Entomologist, has consulted and investigated the damage. He expressed surprise at finding the Hessian Fly so widely distributed in Northern Alberta. He pointed out that the season may be short-lived, but that every precaution should be taken by farmers to destroy as many as possible of the pupae which next year will emerge as flies and repeat the egg-laying process in the stems of the wheat plants. He stated that undoubtedly many of the pupae will be caught up in the wheat bundles and will find their way to the straw piles. These pupae will be infected straw piles for feed or bedding should burn any remaining straw not fed later than April of next year. Some pupae will be left in the stubble, and where ever possible this should be burned over to destroy them.

Saw fly damage is also to be found in some fields throughout the territory above mentioned, but the larva of the saw fly tunnels through the ground just before harvest. The dust like deposit at the base of the plant always distinguishes saw fly damage from that of the Hessian Fly.

Some very serious outbreaks of Hessian Fly have occurred from time to time in other parts of Canada, especially in the eastern provinces. Under favourable conditions it can become a minor menace to the wheat crop of Alberta. Every precaution should be taken to see that its pupae in the straw and stubble are destroyed by burning. The Director of Agriculture at Vermilion, and the Provincial Entomologist, University of Alberta, Edmonton, will appreciate reports from any districts where this insect apparently has been active.

LAKESHORE

Mary Morton of Tomahawk spent a few days with Mrs. O. Eaton last week.

Pat Wood and son Loddie left for Fort Angles on Saturday, after a month's visit with relatives and friends.

Mr. Gemmell and family of Edmonton spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Johnston.

British Climate And British People

In Great Britain's struggle to preserve as a great power, its one great asset is its climate, writes Mary Borden of the United States. "What will win a war of the future? Ships, submarines, airplanes—or the men who man them? Will the land that has bred the best horses and cattle and the densest crowd of men in Christendom fail because machines have it all their own way? I doubt it! I think that no country can have a great navy or army that does not breed tough, elastic, brave men."

"But I am not interested in military or naval supremacy. I think that Great Britain could be beaten in half a dozen ways and still remain in existence the great air power in the world. It is just at cold enough, just above enough, just below enough to be invulnerable for many generations as a power for sanity and reasonableness, for obstinate, invincible unity I attribute entirely to character."

"The truth is that the English climate is the best in the world because it is just depressing enough and, though beastly, not too beastly, at least not one too unhappy to human beings. It puts the brakes on nervous energy but gently whips up the senses and sends the blood coursing through the veins just as it sends the juice of ripening fruit rich in them. Under its influence life is vigorous to the bursting point. Blood stock, the best on earth, is the result. For horse breeding, and the breeding of cattle, pigs and men, there is no country like England. It is the model stud farm of the world. Indeed, in America, I am informed, the strains of horses and cattle have to be reinforced every third generation. It is the climate and the rich drenched soil that are responsible. Life develops slowly and with serenity in these islands. Protected by the foghound crust and the grey mantle of sky, life does not flash up to a day to wither the next."

"The American climate, more than any other thing, produces miracles of energy and achievement. But the climate of England has produced a step forward in human evolution: the Temperate Man, who has achieved a balance between his rights as an individual and his obligations as a member of the community. He is the individual, as compared to that grotesque monster, the mass man. This slow-witted, phlegmatic Britisher, with the gleam of humor in his eye, who keeps the law but will tolerate no interference in his private affairs—he is the type of man who may save us from communism and its Machine God."—Wheat Pool Bulletin.

However, he was unable to procure a substitute teacher for his school at Pakan and consequently Miss Ruth H. Cash was engaged. At the beginning of the term it was decided to dispense with the services of a seven and eight grade teacher, the rest of the staff doubling up, but it was found that the work was too heavy for the staff without one.

"Seen" A Powerful Picture Coming Next Tuesday

"Seen" is one of those rare pictures combining a great achievement in history and a romance so absorbing that it has universal appeal. The anguish of a man torn between two women—the pitiful heroic sacrifice of one—the smoldering fires in the heart of another. And there is the spectacle of the punishing, torturing, behind-the-scenes—the attack of the wild Bendeeta—the Palaces of Prince Said—the thrills of training men and machines creating the jugular vein of the world, the Suez Canal! A really great picture starring Tyrone Power, Loretta Young Annabella, and many other screen favorites. Additional features include comedy, news reel and special features. Usual admission. Show starts at 9:00 p.m.

Cranberries Are Good

BY BETTY BARCLAY

And they're here again, with the Fall flavor and brilliant color that appetite craves in Fall meals. Gay and sturdy, this earliest American fruit has both eye and taste appeal. Cranberry Catsup is an tangy a condiment as ever complemented a baked ham, a succulent roast beef, or a tender duckling.

Originally discovered growing wild on the low marshes of Cape Cod, the cranberry has an honorable history. Tradition says that the Pilgrims learned how to use the sour wild berry from their Indian neighbors. Since then, over one hundred years of cultivation have improved the taste and nutritive content of the fruit so that it is now a food high in vitamins and minerals.

But enough of health talk. Cranberries are good to look at and good to taste and that's the best possible reason for using them in the many modern ways suggested here.

Cranberry Catsup

4 pounds fresh cranberries
2 cups vinegar
2 cups water
4 cups brown sugar
2 teaspoons ground cinnamon
1 teaspoon ground cloves
1 teaspoon allspice
1 teaspoon salt

Cook cranberries, vinegar and water together until all the skins pop open. Put through sieve. Combine with remaining ingredients and cook together for 5 minutes. Seal in hot sterilized jars. Makes 2½ quarts catsup.

Winter Fruit Torte

2 cups fresh cranberries, halved
2 cups chopped apple
½ cup pineapple tidbits
1 cup whipped cream
2 cups sugar
½ teaspoon salt
6 tart shells

Combine cranberries, apple, pineapple, sugar and salt and let stand for 2 to 3 hours. Just before serving, fold tart shells with fruit mixture; top with whipped cream. Makes 6 tarts.

Early Autumn Satisfyer

Company phones, "So there for supper." I become a hurry-appoe. Not much time. An mighty tired. Girls at school. The Cook in fired. "Cooking Goddess, list to me—great an answer to my pleas. What dish shall I serve tonight?" "Topless Pouch Delight"!

Topless Pouch Delight

1-2 cup quick-cooking tapioca; 1-3 cup sugar; ½ teaspoon salt; 1¾ cups fresh peach juice and water; 1 egg yolk, slightly beaten; 6 halves fresh peaches, forced through sieve; ½ teaspoon ground lemon rind ½ cup orange juice; 2 tablespoons lemon juice; 1 egg white.

Combine tapioca, sugar, salt, and peach juice and water in saucepan and mix well. Bring mixture quickly to a full boil over direct heat, stirring constantly. Remove from fire. Mixture will be thick. (Do not overcook.) Pour small amount of tapioca mixture over egg yolk, stirring vigorously; add to remaining tapioca. Add peaches, lemon rind, and orange and lemon juice. Beat egg white until just stiff enough to hold shape. Fold tapioca mixture gradually into egg white. Chill, stirring occasionally. If mixture thickens as it cools Serves 6

Hints On Fish Cookery

If you have never done much fish frying or cooking you will need a few pointers to, enable you to get the best for your money. For those who are old hands at this department of household management, a brief review of the points to remember when purchasing and preparing fish will not come amiss.

The housewife is wise to find out what varieties of fish her locality offers when purchasing fresh fish and the season when it is abundant and moderately priced.

In selecting fresh fish, look for smooth, moist skin, firm flesh, fresh colour, full bright eyes and gills, and firm fins and tail.

One pound of fish fillets usually serves three persons but when buying whole fish with head and tail, count on half a pound for each portion. Keep the fish in a tightly covered pan or use it in a cold refrigerator if it cannot be kept cold, cool, dry and reheat later.

Fish has a high nutritive value and is easily digested. There is little waste in preparing it and it takes only a few minutes to cook which added appeal, makes fresh fish a delicious as well as economical dish.

Baked Whole Fish

Fish weighing 3 to 6 pounds (salmon, mackerel or whitefish)
Oil or melted fat
Plenty sifted bread crumbs

Prepare the fish by cutting off head, tail and fins, then splitting it down at the backbone like a fishes buddie so that it will lie flat open. Oil a baking pan and place fish in it, skin side down. Sprinkle well with salt, then strew all over with finely sifted bread crumbs. Now sprinkle over it oil or melted fat. Place in a hot oven of 500 degrees. Add no water. Bake quickly until well browned, allowing about 10 minutes per inch thickness of fish. The heat may be reduced for the larger fish towards the end of cooking time.

Colourfully fried onions, if liked, may be strewed over the fish before the blanket of bread crumbs.

CANADIANA

From Trains To Tanks

Ottawa—Canadian railways are said to be planning expenditures of $50,000,000 on new locomotives and freight cars during the next six months. It is expected the new trains will be needed to transport freight across Canada when formerly they stopped by way of the Panama Canal. Moreover, government officials mention to them military supplies soon completed soon to allow those plants to produce munitions.

Who's Got The Sugar

Ottawa—With the preserving season on in the country, an appeal for prompt action to deal with reported sugar shortage was sent to the Wartime Price Board in Ottawa by Hon. T. M. Dewar, Ontario minister of agriculture. He said the situation had reached an "alarming critical" stage, the condition is said to be aggravated by the fact that Ontario fruit growers have lost many of their overseas markets.

Greater Productive Farming

Ottawa—The office of the Prime Minister has announced formation of a committee to "mobilize the Canadian agricultural industry in order to facilitate the maximum output of agriculture supplies to Britain and her allies and to ensure domestic requirements." Recommended by Hon. W. G. Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture, the new committee includes officials of his department. It will seek the co-operation of provincial departments in its functions.

Expatriation of Sacrifice

Calgary—Alberta command of the Canadian Legion has decided to advocate conscription as the best method of enlistment of men for the control of manpower, material wealth and industry during wartime. This announcement was made recently by Walter McLaren, provincial president of the organization.

Coffe Problem

Vancouver—As a result of the recent tax of 10 cents a pound on coffee retail prices may be advanced as much as 20 cents a pound, it was estimated by coffee dealers here. It is said that the new tax applies to the green bean, which is the unroasted process drinken 10 per cent, in bulk.

Coffee roasters in British Columbia announce full sympathy with the government's war measures, but find that flat coffee has been treated unfairly. They believe consumption of coffee will decline sharply as a result.

Eat-ee Is Guess?

Edmonton — Unemployment registered in five of Alberta's cities show another drop according to figures released by Alberta employment service. The new total is 4,868 which is 740 less than the figure a fortnight ago. Last month's figures show total registered unemployed was 6,194.

Election Bulletin

Ottawa—There will be no election until after the next regular session of Parliament in January, it was indicated by Prime Minister Mackenzie King recently.

Mr. King expressed opposition to the idea of extending the regular term of office in the present circumstances. In his opinion the people of Canada should have the right at regular periods to decide upon a government which with right even a war should not interfere. The Prime Minister's words were interpreted to set at rest reports of a coalition government for Canada.

Money Supply

Ottawa—Bank of Canada officials have announced acceptance by Sir... $80,000,000 of Dominion of Canada treasury bills due next December 15. Average discount rate on the bills was $90.7395 and the average yield was 0.948 per cent.

Patriotic on Conscription

Victoria—Advancing the Kiwanis conscription idea, Hon. Harry Perry and T. D. Pattullo, said he favored conscription of Canada's manpower and wealth in the new great war. "In my view should have conscription of everything right down to the last penny and dollar," declared the coastal premier.

Fixed Up Prices

Ottawa—Cabled advices from British sources say that the prices of Winnipeg wheat have been fixed on the British market, the federal Department of agriculture announced recently. It is reported that the prices of five essential foods are being fixed by the British government. Foods mentioned are meat, milk, butter, eggs and potatoes.

Map Of Natural Resources Of Alberta

Since the transfer of the Alberta natural resources from dominion to provincial control on October 1st, 1930, there has been a growing demand for the publication of a map of this province which would contain in the setting, routes and without the province, for educational reasons; the miners, trappers, hunters and fishermen; by technical institutions for purposes of reference, and to tourists interested in the vast natural wealth of this province, who would unquestionably be attracted into making personal investigations when informed of the convenience which now exist in making such investigation both easy and desirable.

The map therefore has been designed and will, when in finished shape, measure 40 inches by 22" in size, and is on a scale of 20 miles to the inch. Distinctive features are shown in red, green, blue and black.

Cities stand out clearly.

Those features include surface drainage, mineral resources, airways, surfaced and improved-earth highways, transcontinental railways and railway lines, and Indian reserves. Game, fish and fur areas are shown and the location of the resources,—coal, oil, natural gas, timber, salt, bituminous sands, water-powers, etc., are given.

In the northern section of the province, a brief note describing the type of inhabitants thereto and their occupations, together with a list of the game resources upon which they are largely dependent. In the north-eastern section, the Alberta limits and the great pre-Cambrian Shield are outlined and an additional note is given which touches briefly on that section of the vast Canadian structure, the north-western boundary of which lies in the north-eastern corner of Alberta.

In addition to this map, a half-yearly review in pamphlet form, covering the oil situation in Alberta up to June 30th, 1939, has also been published by, the Department. This will be ready for distribution, and other of these publications, or both, may be secured by applying to the Technical Division of the Department of Lands and Mines, Edmonton.

Boy Scouts Will Repeat Their Services Of The Great War

In ready fulfilment of the offer of their services by Sir Edward Beatty, president of the C.P.R., Lord Tweedsmuir, and prompt acceptance by the Prime Minister, the 100,000 Boy Scouts and Rover Scouts of Canada are preparing to carry out their obligation of "Duty to God and the King" by rendering every possible non-military wartime home service; that like service which proved of value is indicated by the record of their service during the Great War, but for which many important civilian activities would have moved with a much slower pace, particularly in 1914. In practically every city and town thousands of uniformed Scouts were available in troops, or singly, to run messages on wheel or afoot, to act as a rendezvous guide, a bearer, a fund-raising entertainment; to volunteer a night watch duties in a Red Cross kitchen.

As the general war work developed other activities became necessary. One used in connection with Victory Loan campaigns, and Red Cross, Y.M.C.A., and other patriotic fund drives. They met troop trains, and acted as guides and messengers. Another duty was the trains of returning sick and wounded. Scouts helped them on and assisted in every way possible.

In 1914, 1915, 1916 and 1917, Montreal, they met hospital ships. In the country districts they aided farmers during the busy harvest season. Over Toronto Troop, in addition to a large war garden of its own, planted and tended 18 gardens for the wives of soldiers. In smaller communities Scouts did such services as the sawing of the winter's wood for war widows, doing chores and running errands over long periods of time without men felt.

Number of Scouts gave valuable service in hospitals, one Winnipeg Scout putting in a total of some 600 hours in hospital attendance. One Toronto Scout was credited with 620 hours at the folding and packing of bags at a Red Cross depot.

The Wheat Situation

Following the speculative slump, which occurred particularly in North America wheat markets, which started when Germany marched into Poland on September 1st, there has been a price recession which has brought the Winnipeg figure for One Northern close to the 70 cent level. There were some fears that speculative buying would continue uninterrupted until a dangerous attention was created. But the increasing of the margin requirements from 10 cents to 20 cents a bushel, and the subsiding down of public sentiment had a restrictive effect (since reduced to 20 cents)

There is a general feeling throughout the country that the price of wheat will resume its upward. Farmers on the whole are selling very little of their wheat. Many are building granaries to hold their harvests on their farms.

The world crop is unusually large, being estimated at 4,279,240,000 bushels. Ordinarily this would mean low prices, but the trouble is to get foreign supplies market in Europe. Argentina has 100 million bushels ready to sell, but the price there is 80 cents lower than in Canada, which is indicative of the transportation difficulty. Australia's freshly says that the British will not convey wheat from Australia. The same will hold true of Australian wheat which is a good deal farther away from the United Kingdom than the North American supplies.

Another farmers are in a dilemma. It is reported that the government of that commonwealth is contemplating requiring the entire Australian wheat crop, paying farmers for the same at the rate of 4 shillings per bushel.

Europe is looking to North America for barley and oats, and will probably arrange a survey route for ships carrying the same.

Western Canadian wheat is being largely diverted eastward, the demand being on the Atlantic seaboard. The price will undoubtedly suffer severely because of war conditions. It seems just as impracticable to pro, tect shipping via the Panama Canal as it is to protect freighters from the northern temperate.

The federal bureau's report indicates a Canadian wheat crop of 549 million bushels, a prairie wheat crop of 423 million bushels, and an Alberta crop of 145 million bushels.—Winnipeg Free Bulletin.

Torpedoing Victim Saves Trousers

Winnipeg, Sept. 16.—A romance which began when Miss Mary Krowen reached a happy climax Saturday when Winnipeg survivors of the torpedoed steamship Athenia arrived home.

One of the passengers on the trade which brought the survivors back to Winnipeg was Sergeant Alexander Kyrenzakos, fiancee of Peter Kreopyha of Winnipeg, who met her at the station. Despite the frantic activity following the torpedoing, she did not forget to take her precious containing her trousseau. The small case was still with her when she stepped off the train.

Finishing Poultry For Market

Birds that are unthrifty, or birds that are in an unhealthy condition, due to disease or to parasites, internal or external, will never finish properly. Only good healthy, vigorous birds will put on a good market finish. It will prove to be a losing proposition if unthrifty or diseased birds are attempted to be put on crate finished.

Before putting the birds in pens or crates, one should be sure that they are free from worms or external parasites, such as lice and mites, that the quarters are clean and are kept in that condition throughout the process of finishing. The birds should be confined in limited pens with limited runs, not over 50 birds to each lot, and should be fed a developing mash and all the scratch grain they will eat, until they are well finished. It will not pay to crate finished birds that are to be shipped after any distance as the chickgrain in this type of poultry is so great that it will mean a loss to the producer. Where the birds have attained good development they should be fed a scratch mixture consisting of 45 per cent wheat, 40 per cent oats, 30 per cent barley, and a mash consisting of 30 per cent wheat, 30 per cent oats, 15 per cent barley, 15 per cent corn meal, and 10 per cent meat scrap. If the corn is too high priced, make the ration 40 per cent wheat and 30 per cent barley. The oats should be of good climate. Wheat, oats and barley should be well cleaned, and, if tested, they should be shipped to market.

Crate fattening should only be attempted in limited numbers where the person doing the fattening has not had a considerable amount of experience, otherwise it will not pay. Only well finished birds should be placed in the crates, having clothed bottoms, allowing about one square foot of space per bird, not over 5 birds to each section of the fattening crate. Birds should have ½ pound of Baking Soda to each 5 gallons of drinking water for 24 hours before being placed in the fattening crate. The mash should consist of: 30 per cent ground wheat, 30 per cent oat middlings or hulless oats, fine ground, 15 per cent fine ground barley, 15 per cent corn meal, 10 per cent meat scrap. This mash should be mixed with skim milk and should be fed in troughs in a sloppy condition three times a day for a period of approximately ten to fourteen days, when the birds will consume in 20 minutes each feeding. As soon as the birds show signs of going off their feed, they should be killed and dressed immediately, otherwise they will lose weight more rapidly than they gained.

Provincial Championships In Junior Standing Grain Competitors

From a total of 100 Junior Grain Clubs in the Province, it is announced by Hon. D. B. Mullen, Minister of Agriculture, that the Airdrie Club secured the highest average field score in wheat; Obstock in oats, and the Willingdon Club in barley. Among the Airdrie Club, Bert Carlson and Robert Blair had the highest scoring plots with yields of wheat estimated at fifty bushels per acre. A team of two boys from this club won the Alberta Provincial Championship in seed judging and scored second place in the national Contest at the Royal Winter Fair in Toronto last year. The high scoring plots in the Obstock Club were those of Bennie Hrsak and Harry Dunning. Their estimated yields for oats were between 90 and 100 bushels per acre. Wm. and Mich Babish had the highest score in the Willingdon Barley Club.

Over 1700 seed plots ranging from three to four acres have been scored by officials of the Provincial Department of Agriculture. Seed plots are the best ones of a field of not less than previous years. Keener competition among the Clubs, and a higher degree of active co-operation among the members of each Club were the features of the 1939 competition. In those respects special interest should be taken also of the Baltz, Foremost, Bemsey and Nanton Grain Clubs.

It has been found that youth is singularly amendable to the introduction of seed plot work. Members consist of Junior farmers ranging from 18 to 22 years of age who undertake, under Departmental regulations and supervision, to multiply registered grain for use in their various communities. They find it the most economical method of providing seed maintaining the purity for the whole of the farm. Many who have mastered the technique of the seed plot will continue the work as a permanent policy in after years when operating farms of their own.

Junior Grain Clubs have been in operating in Alberta since 1919, and millions of bushels of superior seed grain have been made available to the farmers in their various communities. Wheat Club, are sponsored by the Alberta Wheat Pool. Oat Clubs by the United Grain Growers and Barley Clubs by the Canada Malting Company.

This Little Pig Went To Market

And this one stayed at home. Well, sometimes it did and sometimes it didn't. You see, a farmer might have inserted a classified ad "pigs for sale", and then Mr. Pig or Messrs. Piggies would simply have a change of home. Many farmers who have pigs or other kinds of livestock for sale make use of classified ads to let other farmers know of it. Classified ads are cheap, effective, and cover a wide range. Implements, hay, greenfeed or grain in fact almost any used saleable article can often be sold by meanns of the humble "classified." Classified ads "produce" things sometimes too. Somebody wanting something simply say so through the medium of a classified, and presto, somebody bobs up with just the wanted article for sale.

TENNIS NOTES

The Tennis Club Executive held a meeting in the hotel on Monday night. The Club has spent some $200 in equipping the grounds with tiny three courts. A very successful year was had when considering the obstacles to overcome. The club is $30.00 in debt on the year's expenditures. The executive decided to put on a Bingo in the curling rink to take care of this deficit and then have a clear slate to start with next spring.

The weather was rather bad this year for tennis. The earlier part of the season was spoiled by continuous rains in the latter part of May and throughout most of June.

The tournament held on July 1st was quite successful and was patronized by a number of outsiders. This is the first open tournament Tofield has ever sponsored. If this tournament is followed up and made an annual event there is no reason why Tofield couldn't have one of the largest district tournaments in Northern Alberta. Come one, come all and let's finish up your tennis at the Curling Rink Saturday night with a game of Bingo.

HASTINGS LAKE

The Splitted school children took full advantage of and enjoyed a few unexpected holidays last week when on Tuesday noon their teacher decided to enlist and promptly sent the children home. Mrs. Phillips from north of Tofield has taken charge until a new teacher is selected. She is staying with Mr. and Mrs. Bert Spilsted.

Today (Tuesday) has turned out to be a rather chilly day for the school fair which is being held at Minerich Hall. However, it takes more than a chilly day to dampen the high spirits of a bunch of kiddies. So all undaunted they eagerly piled into Mr. Kyle's truck and away they went and roared merrily on their way. Here's hoping they bring home the bacon.

Last Thursday afternoon Mrs. W. Pancoast's home was the scene of a regular monthly meeting of the Women's Club and was truly a very enjoying afternoon. Plans for the dance and banner to be held the end of October were discussed and the sewing was fully discussed and distributed. The deadline for all work to be finished is the 17th of October when the next meeting will be held and all minute details of the dance settled. A delightful lunch was served by Mrs. Fenkins and Mrs. A. Donald. I can truthfully say the dance will be the highlight of the whole afternoon, especially for the members from the south end of the district, who their journey there and back. But all in all, there's sure some trails in th on their hills.'

Mrs Dorothy Peterson and Mr. and Mrs. A. Sharpe of Edmonton were Sunday visitors of the Anderson's.

Mr Coward visited at the Wosaka's Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Farley of Cameron visited at the Hoover home last Friday.

He went through the Mackman Pass and travelled down river to the Little Hay River. He is now teaching at Dixonville in the Battle River country north of Peace River.

Good Crowd Attend Boxing Program

A good crowd turned out Saturday to see the boxing program staged at the Variety Theatre. The chief bout of interest was the return bout between Frank Mihota of Tofield and Gordon Grayson of Edmonton. This was a scheduled 10 round bout but ended in the third round when Frank Mihota was knocked out. Three weeks previously a bout between the same two men resulted in Grayson being knocked out.

The bout Saturday was a real lively affair with Grayson having the better of the exchanges. Mihota landed two or three heavy blows, one of which in the first round floored his opponent. Grayson was the faster and more aggressive. With all win apiece the score is now even.

There was also three good preliminaries.

The Week In Edmonton

Edmonton, September 26.—There is no shortage of sugar in Alberta. This announcement the preliminary findings of S. A. Smith, K. C., legislative council and member of the Alberta Price Spreads Board who has been appointed special commissioner to inquire into shortages and prices of the necessaries of life. Any apparent shortage is entirely due to the abnormal purchases made by housekeeper he stated, but added that the amounts purchased are not unreasonable.

The Price Spreads Board under the chairmanship of W. D. King, deputy minister of Trade and Industry proposes to co-operate fully with the federal War-Time Prices and Trade Board Regulations. Set up under the Department of Trade and Industry Act, the board is empowered to inquire into the production, manufacture, distribution or sale of any goods, wares or merchandise to which the act does or may apply.

Offences under the federal regulations are listed as follows:

1. Selling or offering for sale any necessary of life at a price that is higher than reasonable or just, and if a maximum price has been fixed by the War-Time Prices and Trade Board, that price shall conclusively be deemed unreasonable and just.

2. No person shall accumulate or withhold from sale any necessary of life beyond an amount deemed reasonably required for the use or consumption of his household or for the ordinary purpose of business.

3. No person shall unduly prevent, limit or lessen the manufacture, production, transportation, sale, supply or distribution of any necessary of life.

4. No person shall in any way impede or prevent or attempt to impede or prevent any investigation or examination instituted by the board.

5. No manufacturer, producer, wholesaler, jobber or retailer shall sell or offer for sale a necessary of life in respect of which a license is required unless he has first obtained a license from the Board.

The order defines a necessary of life as a "staple or other articles of food, clothing and fuel, including the products and materials from which they are wholly or partly manufactured, and any other articles which the board may prescribe.

*****

Regulations also provide for investigations into costs and prices, commandeering of necessaries at fair prices, selling through designated agencies, and the obtaining of information relative to inquiries under oath or affirmation.

Penalties for infraction are severe. Those found guilty may be fined up to $5,000 or to be imprisoned for not more than two years, or both. In addition, it is likely that if necessity arises, the provisions of the Alberta Trade and Industry act regarding undertaking bonds and sureties below the fixed maximum required by a code will draw penalties. In any case, the federal body is empowered to prefer indictments to the Provincial Attorney General concerned.

*****

Personnel of the Alberta Price Spreads Board is as follows. W. D. King, chairman; R. A. Smith, K. C.; Walters B. Campbell, business man and all operator of Edmonton; Henry Benham, Calgary business man. The Board will meet every Wednesday to discuss current problems and to plan what action is necessary to maintain fair practices in the interests of public and trade alike.

Alberta liquor control board will take a smaller margin of profit than that operative before budget changes made necessary a rise in prices, it was stated here during the week. "In fixing our new prices, we merely stated on the basis of the additional cost," said J. A. King, chairman of the board. "We have not taken any profit on the new tax and our margin of profit will be smaller." He added that small stocks are carried as rule, and quantities of stocks are taken out of bond as the need arises.

One of Alberta's newest rail wells may provide surface material for the Jasper highway, it was revealed by Hon. W. A. Fallow, minister of public works. Situated at a point near Vermilion, the well is said to produce a crude with a high asphalt content. "We could use 50 wells like this first one," the minister said. He pointed out that the new producer would not interfere with the Turner Valley field.

National parks in Alberta have just concluded one of the most successful tourist seasons ever experienced. Up to August 31 a total of 69,347 automobiles and 258,557 passengers had passed through the gates—a total increase of 25 per cent for traffic over the previous year, increase by figures shows 14,882 autos and 66,306 passengers more than the previous year.

Hastily R. Drummond Is Elected To Bank Of Montreal Presidency

H. R. Drummond

Following a meeting of the directors of the Bank of Montreal held in Montreal recently, announcement was made of the election of Harold G. Foremost among the reasons listed by Mr. Hayden are:

1. The conventional driver makes his living behind the wheel. He's at it an average of eight hours a day and the very volume of his experience points the need for safety in his driving habits.

2. The commercial driver has safety drilled into him by his employer day after day. He is made continually aware that accidents hurt company good will, boost his employer's public liability insurance rates and place his job in jeopardy.

Truck And Private Drivers

Edmonton.—The truck driver, Mr. and Mrs. Private Driver, drank, think much of your ability to pilot an automobile safely!

For years you've called this same truck driver a road hog or worse, and screamed that there ought to be a law to keep trucks off the road. But times have changed. And the Alberta Safety League today announced results of studies that show the commercial vehicle driver has greatly improved his safety record in recent years, while that of the private car driver has become worse.

Some 1937 the number of trucks involved in fatal accidents has decreased 39 per cent. The number of buses involved in fatal accidents has dropped 41 per cent during the same period.

But the number of passenger cars involved in fatal accidents since 1937 has increased 21 per cent!

Is it any wonder, then, that the truck and bus drivers have every entitled to take back a few opinions of their own as the private driver?

"There are a number of reasons why the average commercial vehicle driver is a safety driver," says Jason G. Hayden, commercial fleet engineer for the National Safety Council.

RECORD SINGLE LOAD

A single load of wheat containing 2284 bushels was delivered from F. C. Nelson farm in the Rosedale district to the Pool elevator at that point. This is probably the largest load of wheat delivered at any elevator in Alberta this season at least. The load was delivered by a truck with a large trailer, the outer load being on the trailer. The truck belonged to McGeachey Bros. and was driven by F. McGeachey. The Pool agent at Sheppard is D. Gowlin.

CURRENT WHEAT SITUATION—
(From Wheat Pool Budget)

The current world situation as regards to wheat is a complex and puzzling one. Unquestionably there is a super-abundance of wheat throughout the world and without war the price would be very low indeed. But war has interrupted the natural course of trade and created an abnormal situation.

World trade last year totalled 601 million bushels, and the Broomhall estimate of trade for 1939-40, made prior to the start of the war, was 584 million bushels. The largest importing nation in the world is, of course, the United Kindom, which normally takes around 200 million bushels. With a world carryover from last year of 1,200 million bushels and with the fact pretty well confirmed that the 1939 world crop is a large one (in fact the second largest in the history of the world) the available supply to fill importing nation's needs is tremendous.

Most European nations have been building up their reserves in anticipation of war. Germany has enough wheat to last her until next harvest, France could export 50 million bushels without touching huge reserves, and even the United Kingdom has enough wheat to last for six months. There is certainly no shortage of wheat in most European nations today. The one notable exception is Spain, and it is possible that Italy will need fairly substantial supplies.

What particularly concerns Europe right now is that the war may be a long one and the nations there must look ahead to see that their populations will not have to go hungry. The United Kingdom's particular problem is to see that supplies are obtainable at the cheapest location. Shipping from long distances is expensive and dangerous and will become more so if German submarines are very active.

Canada has an abundant supply of wheat and can readily fill the needs of the United Kingdom as well as the requirements of other importing nations for Canadian wheat. The statistical position in Canada is as follows:

1939 crop	450,000,000 bus.
Carryover July 31, 1939	102,000,000 bus.
Total Supplies	552,000,000 bus.
Less Domestic Requirements and Carryover	152,000,000 bus.
Available for Export	400,000,000 bus.

The United States has a huge supply of wheat too and will be anxious to export a fair volume. The statistical position there is as follows:

1939 crop	785,000,000 bus.
Carryover June 30, 1939	254,000,000 bus.
Total Supplies	990,000,000 bus.
Domestic Requirements	700,000,000 bus.
Available for Export and Carryover	290,000,000 bus.

The British government through the nationalization of t grain trade and the appointment of one man as buyer for import requirements made an astute move to insure that wheat would be purchased with the greatest efficiency. Millers there are under order to produce a straight run flour which utilizes 70 per cent of the wheat and makes for very little waste. The price of flour is about $3.25 a barrel Canadian funds.

It is quite important to the United Kingdom to have cheap food for its population. With her very existence in jeojardy, nothing can be overlooked that will benefit the nation and assist in the effective conduct of the war. The nationalization of the grain and milling trades has certainly made for efficiency and plans have been carefully made. Bromhall claims that average British requirements are four million bushels of imported wheat each week, which can be carried on conveyed steamers with the government assuming the war risks and freight being arbitrarily fixed at 9 cents. Certainly the grain and milling trades, operating freely and independently, could not possibly do as well in this business as the British government itself.

In Canada speculation in grain ran rampart immediately following the declaration of war. Grain exchange machinery became clogged by the restriction which limited the daily rise or fall to 5 cents a bushel either way. To overcome this the limit was raised to 10 cents. Then apparently to keep speculation within bounds a regulation was put in effect requiring a 30 cent a bushel margin, now reduced to 20 cents. All this seems to have effectively throttled the speculators and a subsidence in price has occured.

The Wheat Pools asked the government to put into effect those clauses of the Wheat Board Act which would enable the Board to handle the entire Canadian crop. This step, of course, would have meant the closing of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, and has met with opposition by the grain trade. It is understood too that James Rank, wheat purchaser for the United Kingdom, has opposed the move. It is possible that Mr. Rank believes wheat can be bought cheaper if the grain exchange is left open. As a loyal British citizen in an important position it would only be natural and right for him to do the best job he could in buying wheat for Great Britain.

On the other hand, the fact remains that the vast majority of western farmers cannot make any profit with wheat at 70 cents a bushel. With a $1.00 a bushel the profit is very slim for the average farmer on the prairies. Costs are already mounting and it seems obvious that the new federal taxes are to be passed on to the consumer and not to the west means, by and large, the farmer has to foot the bill. If the war is prolonged the costs of all articles and commodities farmers have to buy must mount assuredly go up. Farm machinery prices are already on the uptrend. The Canadian dollar is at a discount of around 10 per cent under the United States dollar and that fact alone tends to bring an increase in price for farm machinery.

Most farmers in Western Canada do not want to profiteer because of war, but it is expected that the call will again go forth to increase production. Surely farmers are entitled to at least a reasonable profit! The suggestion has been made that Canadian wheat should rise to the level fixed by the British government for its own farmers. At current rates of exchange for the British pound this would be something like $1.18 a bushel for One Northern at Fort William.

Robber Bees—
Cause And Effect

Honeybee colonies, similar to the human social groups, are subject to the depredations of individuals or groups of individuals known as robbers. Under normal conditions, honeybees are organized into fairly definite groups, each group, performing definite duties inside or outside of the hive. The drone, born from three weeks old, perform the varied duties within the hive such as guarding the entrance, acting as nurses, wax builders, or ventilators, etc. The field bees, more than weeks old, act as scouts, water, nectar or pollen gatherers. The scout bees have the hive in the morning in search of nectar or pollen. When a new source of supply is found, the scout bees communicate the accurate to other bees of the colony by the performance of certain dances. Field bees with commonicating distances of the dancing scout bees immediately leave the hive and find their way toward the new source of supply.

When the nectar flow is temporarily or permanently suspended because of cloudy weather, drought, or other reason, the field bees return to the hive, until a new source is located by scout bees. During such periods of inactivity among the field bees, one or more individuals will take to foraging on their own account. They enter honeybee colonies, usually pretending or candy seeking is in progress, or wherever there is the noisiest sound of honeybees at work or other events. Damaged fruits or vegetables from which nectar may be extracted are especially attractive. Other individuals will attempt to gain entrance to the colony unguarded hole or crevice in a brood colony. Some times robbers will obtain a load of stolen honey or fruit juice they return to the hive, unload and then return for another load. Yet other foragers arrive in increasing numbers. The guards of the weak colony may be overpowered in a very short time by the large number of robbers and will remove to their own hive all the honey remaining in the combs because of the weak hive as other forces the attack starvation.

If the robber bees are successful in obtaining one load of stolen honey, they usually return for a second, being so bold that they attempt to enter stronger colonies, and in a short time a whole apiary may be in a turmoil with the bees to cross that humans or small animals attempting to open or disturb the apiary are severely stung. Such a condition makes it difficult for the beekeeper to carry on the usual colony manipulations. Extractions may be impossible, or not be-light may be emptied of all capped honey in a day or two.

Normally field bees fly with their legs tucked against their bodies but robber bees readily learn from experience that they can easily dislodge the packing guard bee by flying with their legs outstretched. Thus robber bees can readily be identified from field bees by the fact that when in flight. Furthermore, robber bees seem to take little consideration on their abdomens, become the body hairs get rubbed off when squeezing through narrow openings with a result that the abdomen becomes dark and shiny like wasps. It has been demonstrated that honeybees have a memory sense, which probably accounts for the ability of bees to find their way home, always a robber bee." Beekeepers might well bear this in mind and by the colonies that develop a tendency for robbing in the fall are apt to receive the below the following spring. Therefore, robbing should be curbed as soon as possible after it is noticed. Robber bees may be trapped in a special robber cage and killed by the water. Beekeepers should be very cautious and not expose the weak colony of bees for any length of time during a day of nectar. Honey bees or wherever honey is exposed should be carefully checked over to make sure that the buildings are bee tight. Furthermore, scrappings from the hives, bits of comb, etc. should be carefully stored instead of being left indiscriminately around the apiary. Additional care should be taken in the spring and fall to contract the entrances of weak or queenless colonies so that robber bees cannot enter with ease. Entrances. Broken supers, uneven covers, etc. should be repaired or made good. Feeding of sugar syrup should be carried on rapidly through the action of robber bees can by ordinary apiary management. This is especially true of feeding by every will informed beekeeper because of the loss a honey every colony. It may commence as well as the tremendous amount of sugar and not empty the whole colony of an infection of this type. Beekeepers who have had any experience or evidence of robbing in an apiary take extra precaution to prevent occurrences of such an incident.

Plants Grown Without Soil

The growing of plants without soil in water culture medium has captured the fancy of so many—amateurs who would adopt the method as a hobby and even experimental greenhouse men who consider its commercial possibilities—that many explanations of the principles and limitations of the system seems due. The method, says H. Leslie Emslie, chemist-agronomist, is not new but has been used a, students of plant nutrition for the past 75 years, just as sterilized sand is used as the medium for growing plants where the food supply is controlled and the influence of the substances of one or more of the generally recognized essential elements observed.

A tank of moderate size for watercultures may be 36"x30"x8" deep. It may be made of wood or of concrete coated with asphalt paint. The top of the tank is covered with a wire netting on which is placed a 6" or 8" layer of pine excelsior, shavings, peat moss or other suitable material. If seeds are planted in this it must be kept moist but should not be kept in direct contact with the solution in the tank. Seedling plants should be transplanted from the bed with their roots reaching down into the solution.

To every 25 gallons of water may be added, in level tablespoon measure, of monoammonium phosphate, 5 of potassium nitrate, 6 of calcium nitrate and 4 of magnesium sulphate. These supply the chief elements of the food substances and contain, as impurities, traces of other minor elements required in very minute amounts. Iron is usually supplied by adding a small amount of iron and iron should be added. This may be done by dissolving 3 teaspoons of powdered ferric sulphate and 1 teaspoon of manganese sulphate in a gallon of water, then adding one part of the solution last adding to it twice its volume of water. One part of this diluted solution is added to 4 gallons of liquid in the tank. The iron may be supplied also by using one level teaspoon of iron tartrate in one quart of water, and ¼ cup of this solution is added once or twice weekly to 25 gallons of the nutrient solution.

At an agriculture experiment station in the United States tomatoes grown on good ordinary soil in a greenhouse, alongside and and water culture proved nowise inferior. No, in the time has not yet arrived when should contemplate discarding our national heritage—soil—and for use, will produce phenomenal crops if its supply of available plant food is maintained.

CANADIANA

Trade Up

Ottawa.—Canadian exports to United States rose from $30,691,000 to $41,794,142 during August, according to a report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Exports for the first eight months of 1939 totalled $304,064,545, an increase of more than $123 millions over the same period of 1938.

Wrong

Winnipeg.—Grain is said to be pouring into lakehead faster than it can be shipped out. J. A. Bruce, secretary of the Railway Association of Canada, reported the heavy movement has created serious problems in transportation.

In 58 days, deliveries to prairie elevators were 147,763,000 bushels, 20,000,000 over the 1937 estimate. The report shows Alberta's peak at one week at 7,743,000 in 1937 to 7,415,000 in 1938. All four western provinces show increases.

Relief And Unemployment

Edmonton.—Relief recipients in Canada in August 32,000 less in May 1939 than in the same month last year, according to the latest report issued by the Employment Service of Canada. The exact total shows 720,258 in May as against 752,258. Alberta's relief population is given as 54,258 for the same month as compared with 69,378 a year ago. "Special session was called to consider war time measures legislation.

Financial Returns

Ottawa.—Some means would be found "whereby Canadian dollars may be made available to the British government to purchase needed supplies in this country," declared Hon. Ian Mackenzie in a recent statement. Repatriation of Canadian securities and granting of credits were mentioned as probable methods. Bureau of Statistics estimates Canada's national income in Canada at nearly $5,700,000,000 about half of which is in bonds and debentures.

Rationalization

Montreal.—Resolution suggesting that the permanent industry in Canada be planned under full government control was adopted recently by the All-Canadian Congress of Labor. The resolution said it was not in the best interests of the country to leave the industry in the hands of unpatriotic self-seekers.

Canadian Sheep Wanted

Ottawa.—D. C. Dick, recently appointed Canadian wool administrator at a salary of $1 per year has announced that arrangements for the purchase of three-quarters of a million pounds of wool would be required more than double the figures for 1938 or 1939.

National Airway

Winnipeg.—T.C.A. planes have carried 18,848 paying guests during the past five months. It was reported by W. A. Shattuck, district traffic manager. In this same period, he added, 836 tons of mail and 14¼ tons of express have been carried. The air line now operates thrice transport planes.

Chrysanthemums

Toronto.—Nearly 900 special guards keep watch against sabotage on Canada's great hydro-electric plants, at a cost to the province of $1,750 per day.
